Bigler brings message of courage, legacies

FORT MADISON - Unimaginable. A message of legacy that has been distributed to more than 25,000 students in the past four years, was brought to Fort Madison High School Tuesday morning. And the delivery of the message was one of Fort Madison’s own. Former FMHS head basketball coach Mark Bigler spoke with the entire student body and staff about the tragedy of a drunk driving accident that took the life of his grandson.

But without anger, resentment, or hate, Bigler spread a message of legacy and courage in the face of something that even four years later carries a weight that is palpable throughout a gymnasium that is usually a mecca of celebration and excitement. On July 28, 2012 Dana Allen Schoen, then 38, plowed his pick-up truck into the SUV that was carrying Mark’s son Brad, his daughter-in-law Heather, her grandmother and five month old Drake Bigler, Mark’s grandson. They were traveling on a country road in Minnesota. Brad and Heather have two other children who were riding in a different vehicle. A first of the firsts, according to Bigler, that happened because they always wanted to ride with their parents Schoen’s blood alcohol level was .351 which is four times the legal limit in Minnesota.

The accident took the life of Drake, and severely injured Brad, and Heath-er’s grandmother Sharon Shuler. Heather escaped injury as the driver. Schoen’s pickup sheared off the passenger side of the vehicle and left it on the side of the road. A reality that typically results in rage and contempt, and one would be naive to think those emotions didn’t seep into the program.

Will you have the courage?

Supervisors pass 2nd reading of wage proposal

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG

MONTROSE - The Lee County Board of Supervisors took one more step to increase the minimum wage in Lee County on Tuesday morning.

The board passed 4-1, the second reading of an ordinance pushing the minimum wage to $8.20 effective May 1. The ordinance still requires one more reading and the supervisors will be meeting next Tuesday at the Newberry Center in Fort Madison, 728 Avenue G at 9 a.m. and then again at the Heritage Senior Center at 508 Main Street at 1 p.m. where the final reading will take place.

To date no one has attended the meeting in opposition to the move. Supervisor Ron Fedler, again, cast the lone dissenting vote saying his constituency on the north side of Lee County has told him they are against increasing the wage. However, Fedler said Tuesday that he’s not against the wage as a whole. “The minimum wage is too mini-mum… it’s too low,” Fedler said. “The objection I have is as a county we can’t force them to participate and if they choose to opt out they can. I just see a lot of issues with this, and I’ve said this should be a state issue because they can mandate everyone participates. At the forum last week they said this should be a state issue then we won’t have squab-bles between the counties and the cities.” Supervisor Matt Pfleug spoke emphatically about the bump. “People don’t know what’s going on.

FORT MADISON - A minimum wage survey was put in play this week from the Fort Madison Chamber of Commerce at the request of the Fort Madison Mayor Brad Randolph.

The survey, which went out via email to area businesses and business people Monday afternoon asked five questions: How many minimum wage employees does your business employ? Do you start employees at the minimum wage? How much does your minimum wage employee earn? Do you foresee the proposed increase in minimum wage hurting your business? KEOKUK - County Emergency crews pulled a vehicle from the Redwing River access off Valley Road south of Keokuk Tuesday afternoon.

Lee County Sheriff Stacy Weber confirmed there was a body in the vehicle and he doesn’t expect foul play in the incident.

Emergency crews were notified around 1:30 p.m. of a vehicle floating in the river.

“It’s my understanding someone reported seeing a part of a vehicle floating in the water,” Weber said. “We’re in the middle of trying to do an identifi-cation and notification to any family members, so we won’t be disclosing the type of vehicle or the sex of the person found or who we think it might be, at this time.”

Weber also said the Lee County Medical Examiner will be investigating the body.

“When anytime we have a body we ask the medical investigator to come in,” He said he didn’t know...

Pflug: watching people struggle is “just dead wrong”

up there (in Des Moines). Maybe we need to take the responsibility here at home because if you rely on those folks, it’s gonna be a long wait,” Pflug said. “$8.20 per hour...that’s not a livable wage. But we’re moving in the right direction. To me...it’s a very easy decision for me. I don’t care what wage you’re making you see people struggling every day and that’s wrong. That should not be happening in Lee County,” Pflug said. “Unfortunately you have those folks out there, and I don’t care what you say, you see those people out there suffering and it’s wrong.”

Supervisor Gary Folluo said elections will be on the minds of those serving in the cities.

“I don’t worry about one that the board was going to revisit the issue when they’re talking to him, just as Fedler said. “I don’t care if that means I don’t get elected so be it, but if you’re talking about people in Lee County struggling, that’s just dead wrong,” Pflug said looking at Fedler.

Supervisor Don Hunold wanted to remind everyone that the board was talking about a minimum wage, not a living wage. “We’re not talking about a living wage here. We’re talking about a minimum wage. If you want to talk a living wage we sure aren’t talking about $8/hour.”

Mike Bennett, who has been a part of the Raise the Wage committee, said according to state indexes, a living wage would be about $16.75/hour.

In an unrelated matter, during the board’s workshop session, the board directed County Auditor Denise Fraise to have County Attorney Ross and vehicle cameras for the sheriff’s department. Sheriff Stacy Weber said after investigating the issue further, another company has been located that can provide additional service such as geo-mapping, links to video footage which would eliminate the need for the department to burn disks and other technological advantages over the company originally recommended. The board will revisit the issue when a separate recommendation and public hearing can be held.

Folluo said the agreement with the pipeline company was that the expenses would be neutral and the county shouldn’t be out any money when the pipeline requested security.

In other action, the board, • tabled action on a new company to provide body and vehicle cameras for the sheriff’s department. Sheriff Stacy Weber said after investigating the issue further, another company has been located that can provide additional service such as geo-mapping, links to video footage which would eliminate the need for the department to burn disks and other technological advantages over the company originally recommended. the minds of the Bigler family, is now met with hope and direction.

Bigler told the students that courage and legacy need to be a part of their lives going forward. “You have to have the courage to take someone’s keys... the courage to be one not drinking... the courage to plan something else that’s the center of the fun,” Bigler said. “It takes courage to be the leader. You probably will be made fun of as a leader in that situation. It’s called leadership... It’s called respect.”

Bigler said his family’s tragedy has become a national message for courage and legacy. ESPN’s primetime magazine E:60 did a segment on Brad’s family and their tragedy. “Most of these students can identify with a personal experience with a family member, but then it comes to the alcohol, and we’re not naive here, but if we can impact one person. That’s worth it.”

Mark told the students that he didn’t harbor resentment for Schoen. “I feel sorry for him, I don’t wish him bad. He made a huge tragic mistake. But it was the third time...the first time he killed someone, the third time he was arrested.”

“What will your legacy be as a leader. What difference can you make,” he asked the Bloodhounds sitting quietly, but fully engaged. “Do you have the courage, not just for Drake, but for someone you love, your friends, your family.”

He told the students they are going to face these very situations very soon and as adults. He said social drinking isn’t a bad thing but it the decisions you make afterwards. “It effects lives...it effects your health. “Are you gonna be like Dana – one that drinks too much – or the others who didn’t take the keys because they didn’t want to start a fight. It’s about courage,” he said.

One high school student asked Mark after the presentation if Schoen was still in prison. Bigler said he got a 4.5 years prison sentence and was out after a year and a half. “But we’re not looking for punishment like that,” Bigler said. Another student, Cason Barker approached Bigler after the presentation and said the message struck very close to him because his mother was taken the same way. “I can actually relate to this situation, my mom passed away in 2012...” Barker said and then had trouble finishing as emotions overtook him. Bigler stepped in and embraced him and told him that his mother would want him to be successful and want him to live a happy life.

Barker said his mother was taken when a drunk driver collided with the vehicle he was in traveling to his grandmother’s home in Missouri.

Lee County Board of Supervisors. The second reading of an ordinance moving forward to raise the minimum wage to $8.20/hour in the county. Other local governments have the right to opt out of the increase by a majority vote of their respective boards. The final reading will take place Tuesday at Heritage Senior Center in Keokuk with the meeting starting at 1 p.m.

Randolph said he personally had a problem with counties adopting their own wages on several fronts including it could potentially pit cities within a county against each other for labor.

“The last minimum wage increase was in 2009 and we are due. I think it should come from the federal or state level. Home rule’s ok because it gives counties and cities autonomy but you get into that whole discussion. ” Randolph said he thinks that bill will make a move in the interim. "I've asked a lot of people. It could be a moot point," Randolph said. “That legislation has passed out of committee and the Republicans have enough votes to pass it, but will they? The prevailing winds say so. So that's why the Supervisors pushed that date out to May 1.”

When asked if he believed the city would opt out or vote in favor of the minimum wage if it comes to that, Randolph...abstained.

“I'd like to have a little bit more information before I answer that,” he said. “I might have the Chamber update the survey, get that information and then make a decision. I'm pretty comfortable saying that Keokuk is for it. But does that pit Keokuk against Fort Madison? I want people to have a better income, I do, but then you have to look at living wage versus a minimum wage and then you get into that whole discussion.”

He said in the update to the survey he may look at trying to catch the gap of employees between the current minimum wage and the proposed minimum wage to more effectively gauge the number of employees who would stand to be affected.

“Honestly, other than the committee, I haven't heard a ton either way. A lot of people say they don't pay the minimum so it doesn't effect them. But are there a lot of people in the gap that might be effected. I'm hoping the survey gives me more added facts that helps me make a better decision.”

Several city councilman interviewed previously on the minimum wage issue had basically the same stance. Councilmen Kevin Rink and Rusty Andrews said the issue deserved a lot of thought and shouldn’t be rushed because of the complexities but both agreed the minimum wage is too low.
