House bill looms large over county’s decision to set minimum wage at $8.20

FORT MADISON/KEOKUK - Lee County would potentially move their minimum wage to $8.20 on May 1, but a bill awaits Gov. Terry Branstad’s signature that could wipe the measure out.

At a split meeting of the Lee County Board of Supervisors Tuesday, a morning session in Fort Madison and an afternoon session in Keokuk, two separate discussions were held before a final vote to move the wage from the current rate of $7.25. The vote passed, 4-1, to a smattering of applause from about 20 people in attendance, most of whom were appointees to the Raise the Wage committee. Supervisor Ron Fedler cast the dissenting vote.

Fedler has stood his ground throughout the vote saying the wage should be set by the federal or state governments, while the other board members took a position that the state had ample time to do so but hadn’t moved on the wage.

House File 295, the bill preempting the counties’ rights to set their own minimum wage, was approved by the Iowa Senate on Monday night and will now go before the governor. If it’s signed, all counties will be required to go back to the $7.25 minimum. Employers would be free to pay as they see fit as long as they pay the state minimum.

The Raise the Wage committee was made up of appointees by supervisors. Kathy Gabel, a member of the wage committee appointed by Supervisor Gary Fallou said she was thrilled with the vote despite the looming legislation.

“I’m thrilled. I think it really reflects our county’s attitude of being progressive,” Gabel said. “I know there are some obstacles at the state level but I really think these guys listened to the commission they put together and respected that information and said, ‘Yeah.’”

Chairman Rick Larkin said it’s his belief that Gov. Branstad will sign the bill and possibly something could come from the Ways and Means committee to bump the wage this session, but he didn’t think that was probable.

“I presume that when it passed the Senate in the same version as it did the House, it goes directly to the governor and he’s gonna sign it.”

The Fort Madison Bloodhound team took third in the Class A portion of the Falcon Relays Monday. According to head coach Erin Benner almost the entire squad improved on previous times this year and set season best times.

“I was pleased with the boys at tonight’s meet,” Benner said.

The Hounds were paced in scoring by Caleb Gehle’s first in wheelchair shot and the wheelchair 100 and 200-meter events. The 4x800 meter team of Jared Kester, Joseph Grabowski, Dayne Cordray and Matthew Meirott took second place with a time of 9:54.03.

“All members of the team ran their fastest this season in this race to-night,” Benner said. “We are hoping to continue to cut time all season.”

She also said Gehle threw well but had a bit of trouble with the racing chair.

“Next time,” Gehle said. “We are still continuing to learn the ins and outs of the racing chair, but each race is a good learning experience for him.”

Quentin Schneider took two third-place finishes in the 400-meter run and 400-meter hurdles.

State legislators likely to look at bump in election cycle

same version as it did the House, it goes directly to the governor and he’s gonna sign it,” Larkin said after the meeting. “Now they may want a wage attached to it and it’s a revenue issue it may be able to go through Ways and Means.”

Larkin said he would venture a guess that during next year’s election cycle a minimum wage bill will be presented.

Tracy Leone of the Iowa Labor Federation, a proponent of increasing minimum wages across the state, agreed with Larkin’s assessment.

“My bet is the governor will sign it. If I look into the crystal ball I would say they would introduce a bill next year. There is no live bill to do it right now.”

She, too, said since the wage is a revenue issue something could come from the Ways and Means committee in the form of a bump, but she wouldn’t bet on that. Leone also pointed to some confusion between Branstad and the Iowa Speaker of the House Linda Upmeyer.

“I heard the Governor said on public radio yes- terday that he had said all along he would like to see the wage raised modestly. $8.20 is modest, but Speaker Linda Upmeyer said that conversation never happened. So there’s some confusion out there already.”

Folluo said he didn’t understand why anyone would be against a minimum wage boost.

From a personal standpoint, I don’t understand anyone feeling threatened by raising the minimum wage,” Folluo said. “I was a small business owner myself and I started people at minimum wage, but whatever wage that is is just part of doing business,” he said.

Gabel said if the governor does sign the law and the minimum wage isn’t increased, that another effort would have to be underway.

“We start all over again, maybe at the state level, I don’t know,” she said. That’s frustrating, I think that Gov. Branstad is in favor of raising the wage, so I was really hopeful hearing that. In the meantime a lot of people go without, it may not seem like a lot of money to some people, but to the people that are living within that income, it is a step.”

Making his case

Raise the Wage committee member Mike Bennett discusses his position on the minimum wage and why it’s important to move now to help the population still living in poverty in Lee County.

The group was founded more than 40 years ago as an ecumenical organization committed to eliminating substandard housing.

Volunteers work side by side with recipient families who contribute sweat equity in their new home learning construction and maintenance skills.

The homes are sold to families at no profit and are financed with affordable loans. The repaid funds are combined with donations from the community to build more Habitat homes.

“Locally, we have had grants and donations from organizations, businesses, churches and individuals. Without their support our projects would not be possible,” Wolfe said. “We think that adding people to the board and steering committee at this time helps energize and enhance our programming going forward.”
