Teachers discuss value of new school

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG
PCC EDITOR

FORT MADISON - A glimpse at the past six decades through the eyes of a group of current and former Fort Madison School teachers gives an insider’s look at the school district’s current elementary school status.

Former teachers Angie Sodey, Dawn Schnicker, Mary Beth Walker, Sally Denning, Dana Rheinschmidt, and Kate Lamb, and current Lincoln Elementary teacher Wendy Bailey sat down to discuss the imminent need for a new PreK to 3 facility in Fort Madison.

These teachers represent close to two centuries of combined elementary instruction and said they are very concerned with the current status of the district’s Lincoln and Richardson elementary schools.

Issues such as technology, safety, learning culture, environmental distractions, and others prompted the ladies to get behind the effort to build the new $27 million school on the current middle school campus at Bluff Road and 48th Street. The school is proposed to sit east of the current middle school. The referendum will also include two IHSAA and IGHSAU baseball and softball fields. School Board President Timm Lamb said the fields were part of the initial public hearing held to discuss the possibility of building the new school.

The referendum vote is set for June 27 from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. with four polling locations at the Fort Madison Public Library, Roling Hall in Fort Madison, Grace Bible Church in Wever, and the West Point Public Library. Anyone 18 and over who resides within the district is eligible to vote in the election.

“These schools were state of the art, back in the the 50s and maybe even before that,” said retired teacher Sally Denning. “They just aren’t fit anymore to teach these children. They aren’t fit to teach these kids if this were the 70s.”

Schnicker said during the hot days of the school year there are so many distractions that learning is constantly interrupted.

“’What I keep coming back with is - Would you want to be doctored the way they doctored 20 years ago. I mean, things change, but we aren’t changing and that leaves these children behind.’”

-Kate Lamb retired FMCSD teacher
NEW SCHOOL HAS RIGHT IMPACT ON OUR FUTURE

Dear Editor,

Undertaking construction of a new school is a once in a generation event. It is not very often when two communities come to the decision that a better, competitive education, new infrastructure becomes essential in making that happen. I appreciate that forward thinking and would hope that our communities would rally behind those leadership decisions.

Recognizing the limitations that older school buildings have and realizing that trying to improve on those old buildings would be money not well spent, is just plain fact and makes the decision to vote yes and contribute very simple for me. Our school systems are wanting to invest not only in our children’s future, but in our communities’ futures as well. We all want our communities to thrive and be successful.

In order for that to happen our school systems must be part of that success plan. We must step up, get excited about the possibilities and do our part to ensure that it happens! 21st century education is an integral piece of the puzzle that makes the big picture so important. It’s decisions such as these that can have such a lasting impact on the future of our communities - one that we can be proud of, and should be part of whether or not you have children in the school systems.

Education is competitive just like in business. If we fail to offer our children the latest in technology in an environment conducive to advanced learning, we are assuredly short changing our kids and educators, and as our students fall behind, our communities suffer as well. Maintaining what we have only makes it more difficult for the next group of students and teachers to try and achieve what they can dream.

The time has come. It’s what’s best for our communities. Count me in for the Fort Madison and Holy Trinity school projects!

Sodey: New building has changed students’ mindset

"In most cases we had to share those and you had to keep them on one floor because you couldn't carry them up and down the stairs. And even then technology was chalkboards and rows of desks and that's not the way children are being taught now," she said.

Schnicker said even in the '70s the buildings weren't sufficient to support technology of that time, specifically overhead projectors.

"To see those screens you had to turn off the lights, and that would turn off the ceiling fans and it would just be awfully, awfully in there. Then you'd have the fans going again and you couldn't hear. We need to address that heat issue for these kids so they can learn unencumbered," Sodey said.

Sodey said one of the worst experiences of her teaching career was when she was helping a student with a paper and sweat dripped off her onto the student's paper. "I was mortified," Sodey said.

That was one of many most embarrassing moments teaching and we have to get those kinds of distractions out of the process.

Superintendent Erin Slater showed a picture of a child laying their head on a desk, exhaust ed from heat on a day that school had to be dismissed. Slater, who's been giving presentations at local groups, service clubs, governmental agencies, etc., said due to busing issues, when she has to dismiss school for excessive heat, she has to do it for all the district.

"Even the schools that have HVAC have to be dismissed because of busing. So the distraction isn't just at the elementary level, it affects each and every one of our students."

The teachers also indicated some concern that the misinformation is being spread about the tax impact of the building.

"There are still a lot of people out there that are misinformed and we've had many many meetings to provide them with the correct information," said Walker.

"I think it's just misinformation and I don't think they bother to find the truth," Denning said.

"I was at a baseball game in West Point and someone told me this was the fourth time we were trying to get a bond passed. It's the second time.

Sodey said people need to see what impact the new middle school has had on teaching, and students' mindsets in general.

"If those schools that were only bother to see what we have at the middle school, it's a wonderful facility, and what the children are able to do in that middle school is amazing. I have taught at a lot of the different schools. They did go back to the middle school at the older place and I spent some time working with the kids and observed the behavior and I was very concerned about that behavior. I had seen it there before, but I thought it was worse," Sodey said.

Then I went to the new school and did some volunteering there and you do not see that behavior there. Those kids appreciate that new building and they respect it and they are doing in those classrooms with that technology is just amazing."

Schnicker said there is also misinformation about the cost of renovating the buildings and that it will cost more to renovate than it will to build the district and will still need a referendum to raise the money to do that.

"That was their mindset," Board President Timm Lamb said.

Kate Lamb told the Fort Madison Rotary group that it will take $34 million to renovate the current buildings which would include bringing them up to code, as they are currently grandfathered in on city code as they stand.

Lamb said the cost to the average citizen if the referendum passes is less than nine cents a day.

According to literature from the district, the property tax impact for homeowners in the district would be $2.64 a month on a homestead with a $75,000 assessed valuation or $31.68 per year. Agricultural land would be taxed at a lower impact to the owner.

If passed, the school is tentatively set to open at the beginning of the 2020 school year and both Lincoln and Richardson school students would attend that new building.
