Lost Bear finds home at sports complex

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG

WEST BURLINGTON - Their story is sweet, their coffee is fresh, and their plans are set. TJ Widbin and Melissa Cer-vantes, a married couple who own and operate Lost Bear Coffee in West Burlington, have announced plans to expand in Fort Madison with a larger outlet at the Baxter Sports Complex. Specialty coffees, frappes, and smoothies will soon be an option for those traveling on 48th Avenue with a similar concept to the current Lost Bear outlet in the parking lot of Westland Mall in West Burlington.

Widbin said hopes to have the location up by mid-November.

“We were hoping to have it done in October with the fall sea-son and everything, but that's in a perfect world... and we all know how that goes," he said.

Widbin just a year ago was laid off from his job working with computer software and wasn't sure where he was going to land.

Widbin said he and Cervantes, at one point said a prayer after he had been laid off for guidance.

Fort Madison Area Arts Association

Fort Madison - Ft. Madison Area Arts Association always contributes to Fort Madison's major tourism month. The September feature exhibition of Dodd Printing & Stationery has been in Ft. Madison for four generations and was just purchased by the "fifth" generation Matt Hayes. A hand feed press, purchased many moons ago at ISP by Neal Dodd, is amongst the display and will be utilized at the reception. The Chandler & Price Pilot press is special in that it is the only table top press that prints with the quality of a table press. The wood type is locked into a chase. Displays show the differing stages of letterpress to the end product. Cuts or zinks provide style. Naphtha cleans the inks. Inks have evolved from rubber or oil base to a polymer. Oil is still widely used. Drink coasters are perfect for letter press and will be available for families or businesses to order at the gallery (the perfect business card!). Offset printing came along in the 1950's to take the place of letterpress. When Neal started in 1977 half of the work projects were still letterpress, which is a more technical craft. In the last few years digital printing has taken the place of...

offset. Now one piece of equipment takes the place of many machines. Neal feels that the nostalgia of letterpress will keep the format continuing, similar to black & white photography. Neal reminisces “I grew up with letterpress and offset. The thing most missed is the smell of the shop. The containers of gas and inks smelled so good that people would come by just to smell the shop. The chemical make-up of solvents has changed and the smell is gone. “We had an old cabinet with the smell trapped inside. As the overall smell of the shop changed, I would go to the cabinet to get the last whiff!” There is a loyalty and appreciation for the letterpress art form. It is not practical or viable anymore in commercial work, but the beauty of the art can create unique products, like the coasters, bookmarks, and notecards that are available in the show.

Mel Stockwell of The Calico Press is one busy lady. When she graduated Coe College her degree was in fine arts with emphasis in printmaking but more intaglio and litho. She worked for large commercial print houses and began collecting presses. Eventually she left the corporate world and placed all her collected equipment into one building on her farm. The Calico Press is a commercial printer outside of Birmingham, Iowa, which she runs 36 hours per week.

“My wife just told me to take some time and take a breath. I took a trip to Lebanon, which had already been planned, and then when I came back we heard that Java Shack was for sale and we decided we’d take a chance with this,” he said.

Cervantes has held her name due to her professional wedding photography business, but said the two have a passion for coffee because of how they met.

“We had our first date over coffee so that’s why we have a passion for it,” Cervantes said. “Coffee is something warm that people can come together over so that’s how we developed a passion for doing this.”

But they didn’t meet at the local coffee shop. Cervantes was visiting Kenya at the same time Widbin, a Waver native, was also visiting with friends. The two bumped into each other and started a long-distance relationship and then ended up marrying.

Still not quite 30, Widbin said he originally looked in the Burlington area to expand, but couldn’t find anything to their liking before they were approached by individuals with the Baxter Sports Complex.

The two got started in November of last year when they looked at the Java Shack, which Cervantes said “had good bones, but needed a little TLC, and by Dec. 2 had taken possession of the Westland Mall location.

“They have just been fantastic to work with from the start. They’ve been very helpful in moving this project along. ”

November 2016, Widbin said they needed to acquire a special use permit from the city, which is set for a hearing on Sept. 13. He said he would like to start construction on the facility the next day, if possible.

“We think it’s a great location with the sports complex and the schools in that area. We’re happy that it’s a local group we’re working with. A lot of times you pay rent to corporations and it’s nice when you can make those investments with local groups instead,” he said.

TJ Widbin, and wife Melissa Cervantes, are opening a new branch of the couple’s Lost Bear Coffee at the Baxter Sports Complex. They hope to have the business up and running by mid-November.

“Just can’t draw at all, so, I kind of put this design together using Legos. Myers Construction is going to build the shop and he looked at this and said, “I got it. I can do that.”

Hours of operation for the new shop haven’t been determined because of all the activity at the Sports Complex.

“Everything in these two rows of tables, fifty cents,” I told the dark-skinned couple as they moved slowly down the aisle, stopping occasionally to pick up an item and inspect it, an old-style eggbeater, a slightly used George Foreman grill, complete with instructions.

I had joined the throng of “garage sellers” who blossom during Old Threshers in Mt. Pleasant, deluging the landscape with hawkers (including every road leading into Mt. Pleasant), selling everything from pots and pans to rusty old tractors. Only I was “justified” in holding my garage sale. When Ginnie and I got married going-on two years ago, we merged two households. We both had hurry-up garage sales at the time, but there was still a lot of stuff left over that I had shoved into the barn and let the mice have their way with. Since I’m wanting to get a bucket-call in the spring, I needed to make room. Everything had to go, and fast. I priced the stuff for a quick sale, so that I wouldn’t have to handle it again, or haul it to the Quarter-Maybe-More store. A lot of the items I had paid good money for, like an antique ballot box—bye bye, only two dollars.

The man stopped and fingered a black iron trivet in the shape of a turtle. There were two of them—a mamma and baby. I knew what he was thinking. “Fifty cents each, or fifty cents total?” Before he could ask, I volunteered, “They go together, fifty cents total.” He reached in his pocket for change.

He reached in his pocket for change.

“I know where Turtle Island is?” he asked. I thought for a moment. I had heard the term somewhere. “Uh, Wisconsin!” I ventured. He harrumphed, “Turtle Island is North America.” “That’s right. Now I remember.” Then it came to me. The couple was not Hispanic like I had assumed. They were Native American.

He launched into the story using a lot of hand gestures. “Sky Woman fell down to earth when it was covered with water. Different animals tried to swim to the bottom of the ocean to bring back enough dirt to create land. The muskrat was able to gather dirt and put it on the back of a turtle. The turtle grew into North America. That’s why North America is called Turtle Island. Some say it resembles a turtle.”

My phone beeped. My old phone had crapped out and I had just gotten a new one. I was still getting used to it. He shook his head in disgust, “That gadget gonna save your bacon when you’re up to your neck in water?” I have looked puzzled.

“Ask the folks in Texas. Phones went dead after twenty-four hours. Couldn’t charge’m. Most rainfall ever in the United States.”

He really emphasized the word, “ever.” I shook my head in agreement. “It’s only the beginning, white boy. Man has polluted the environment until She cries out for help.”

After they left I checked my phone for the average elevation of Iowa. It’s 1,100 feet. Illinois is 800. Illinois will go first. Have a good story? Call or text Curt Swarm in Mt.
