Spooks show up for PORT fun run

Fort Madison Mayor Brad Randolph joins in the fun at the 4th annual PORT Spooktacular Boo-Athlon at the Baxter Sports Complex Saturday morning. More than 100 came out to run and bike and help raise funds for the PORT trail project. At left top, Katelyn Dennis finishes off the 5K run. Dennis won the female division of the event.

Tough decisions coming as criminal activity escalates

too. There are times when two deputies are patrolling the whole county. This guy on Friday pulls out a handgun and fires at a car and the chase is on. Fort Madison Police helped try to locate the vehicle, but to no avail. More officers patrolling would certainly have increased the odds of finding the suspect and the vehicle he was riding in. There are no guarantees as people can be pretty resourceful when they are eluding the police.

But it points to a picture. Burlington is dealing with shootings almost on a weekly basis and that criminal element is going to find it’s way south, if it hasn’t already. Our ability to respond quickly and effectively surely correlates to our ability to solve and crimes and punish criminals.

A good look needs to be taken at the number of deputies on the streets. We just added one in the form of a K9, Gunner. Another K9 unit will be incorporated in Lee County before the end of the year. These, it must be reminded, have cost the taxpayers $0. Two needed reminders, have cost the year. These, it must be built Beaver said Friday after the shooting incident, that Lee County isn’t going to stand for that type of criminal activity. “We’re gonna push back...hard.” And we need to have his back.

And speaking of having people’s back, Head Coach Tony Shiffman and the Hounds had the back of Caleb Gehle, a senior who’s been part of the team all year on the sidelines. Gehle has to wear leg braces and is regularly confined to a walker or wheelchair, but on Friday, he suited up and ran in a two-point conversion, under his own power, for the Hounds with an assist from the Washington coaching staff and players. I think I’ll root for the Demons in the playoffs next week. But that’s Beside the Point.
Dinner went to the dogs after trip to the store

When Ginnie saw the white Target sacks beside the washing machine (new towels that needed washed), she said, “Ah, hat!” The missing buns would obviously be there. They weren’t.

“I distinctly remember tossing the buns in the car,” she said. So we gave the car another going over, including the sacks for Goodwill and for the girls at work. Nary a bun. “The chickens were really curious now. “What are those humans doing?”

Ginnie surrendered, her shoulders slumped. “I must’ve left the buns in the cart. Someone’s going to enjoy our bread, Ginnie strangely jumped up and started for the bedroom. She came back holding a torn open bun package, with a couple of missing buns and several more shredded. Buddy slunk around the kitchen with his tail tucked, looking real guilty. He had evidently found the buns on the floor, in a sack, and scurried under the bed with them. Ginnie, the good-hearted person she is, couldn’t even scold him. He’s too cute. Buddy had gotten away with one.

The chickens sure enjoyed shredded buns the next morning.

“Hey,” I said, putting a positive spin on it. “This is still much better than anything I would’ve fixed.” (Which is true.) “Cheggers can’t be boozy. I have a feeling those buns are going to show up somewhere.”

Halfway through the Joppy Sloes on bread, Ginnie strangely jumped up and headed for the bedroom. She came back holding a torn open bun package, with a couple of missing buns and several more shredded. Buddy slunk around the kitchen with his tail tucked, looking very guilty.
