FM police looking for more reserves

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG

FORT MADISON - A depleted police reserve program has the Fort Madison Police department looking at adding to the reserve officer corps.

Jamie Carle and Brent Gibbs, the co-coordinators of the local police reserve program, are looking for residents who are interested in joining the program to give back to the community or as a springboard into a career in law enforcement.

Carle said currently the department has just three officers in the reserve corp and would like to add seven to nine officers. The police department is planning on having a testing session on Sunday, April 8. All applications would need to be returned by April 1.

Those interested in applying for the reserve program can do so by picking up a packet at city hall, filling it out, and returning it by April 1.

Testing for the program would include a background check and some basic testing as well as a physical test that involves the same physical testing as the regular officers working through the academy.

Fort Madison Police Chief Tim Sittig said reservists aren't subjected to the same performance levels of what's called the Cooper Institute Standards which include sit-ups, push-ups, sit-and-reach, and a 1.5 mile run.

"Those applying should know that we don't have the same expectations of, say, a 20-year-old out of an academy. But we do need to know that they can do a push or sit-up. There are different standards for gender and age and we look at those," Sittig said.

"If they are riding with us and we have a pursuit or a fight, our expectation is for them to participate as well. So we want to make sure they can cover our back. We think of the police reserves the same way as a national guard...citizen officers who train once a month and, if something bad happens, we can activate them."

HTC qualifies nine for state speech

BY PCC STAFF

FORT MADISON - The Holy Trinity Speech team delivered stellar performances at the Iowa High School Speech Association’s District Contest on Saturday at Tri-County High School, earning nine “Superior” ratings along with seven scores of “Excellent”.

Scoring top marks in two events was Freshman John Stinson in Prose Interpretation and Improvisational Acting. Also, earning “Superior” marks were juniors Sam Avery in Radio News, Sterling Barnes in Story Telling, and Kyle Scheetz in Story Telling; sophomores Ryan Otte in Story Telling, freshman Danny Caruso in Acting, Elizabeth Ebbing in Poetry Interpretation, and Annabelle Scheetz in Poetry Interpretation.

The “Superior” rating advances these orators to the State Contest which will be held at Cedar Rapids Kennedy High School on March 10.

West Point residents may soon see an increase in their property tax levy or their sewer bill or a combination, but either way they’ll be paying for a $1.5 million upgrade to the waste water treatment facility on the town’s east side.

At a special meeting Monday night at West Point City Hall, Jack Pope, a physical engineer from Garden and Associates of Oskaloosa, told the full council that the amount of ammonia nitrogen in the detention area would not pass new regulations from the Iowa Department of Natural Resources.

The new regulations reduce the amount of nitrogen as well as E.coli present in the water at the facility. Pope said he wasn’t concerned about the E.coli because the current facility is still under those limits.

Pope had three options for the city to consider. Two of those options carried a price tag of $3.3 million and included additional land requirements and one of those would have required a building to be put on the property for additional filtering. The other option would require four new aerators and rock filter system.

That plan that was approved by the council. Construction crews would build a structure approximately 30’ x 60’ at the current location and fill a portion of it with rock and have the blowers inside the box. The rock would serve as a filtering system while the blowers circulated the water to help with the cleaning process. The rock helps capture the bacteria while the water can flow through. Pope said it would cost about $54,000 per year for operations and maintenance.

Pope told the council he was recommending the $1.5 million option because the others have the higher price tag and that option didn’t require land acquisition. There was little discussion among the council on the options, but funding the project did raise some concerns.

Pope said the city would be eligible for a loan from the state’s Revolving Loan Fund. But that cost, shared among the 475 users on the city’s waste water system, would raise monthly bills about $25 for 20 years or until the loan is paid back. Pope said he would also inquire about a Community Development Block Grant, but because the sewer rates were so low, they probably would put the project on hold.

Reserve program can be jump start to career

Gibbs said the reserve officers fill in with special events, traffic control, and requested security in the city. There is no pay other than the $1 per year to keep them on workers' compensation if something were to happen. Reservists can also make money manning security for events like sporting events, the rodeo or other events.

"We tend to give those jobs to the reservists so they can get some experience and also to make a little money. Aside from the taxers and firearms, they have to pay for most of their gear. We hold some fundraisers for them like the dunk tank at RiverFest and we'll do some Pizza Hut fundraisers for them. We try to help where we can."

Rachel Sugars is one of the three current reservists and said it's helped her along her career path. She said the state law requires reservists work a minimum 12 hours per month.

"This is something that I've been working for and I enjoy it," she said. "It's got my foot in the door for a full-time job."

Sugars said she's been sworn in for a year and half, but has been involved in the program for the past three years.

"When I got hired on, we didn't do the physical testing, but I went through the regional tests," Sugars said.

Carle and Gibbs both started as reservists who found an interest in law enforcement and now have made full-time careers out of the profession.

Sittig said reservists usually sign up for two reasons.

"One is that they use it as stepping stone for a full-time job and others just want to give back to the community," he said. "So if that's an interest to them, some of them progress and get to the point that through getting all the required training passed and approved they can take a car out. Others are perfectly happy riding and partnering up, either way is perfectly fine with us."

Reservists would also need to learn 10-codes and the phonetic alphabet as part of the training program and would need to pass a background check.

"Once they complete their certification program, the moment we take them on as a reserve officer, depending on their work schedule, that's about 18 months, but once they complete that, they are eligible to write citations and everything other than implied consent," Gibbs said.

Funds could come for a variety of sources

toward the bottom of the list because the rates could be higher to pay for the project.

“Right now, that would set your monthly bill at about $36 per customer. And, if I look around other communities this size, they typically pay between $30 and $40 a month so you have some really low rates,” he said.

City Administrator Gene Menke told the council the city could levy for the project as well. Other options were using Local Option Sales Tax funds that the city currently doesn't have obligated to anything else. He said another option was to issue general obligation bonds to pay for the project, or a combination of all the options to help ease the impact on users.

“We're gonna kick that can down the road,” Menke said after the meeting. “We're just not sure what that will look like yet.”

The council approved the upgrade called a SAGR in environmental terms, meaning Submerged Attached Growth Reactor, by a unanimous vote. Pope said he would submit the application before March 1 because that's the state's deadline for revolving loan applications. He also said the town has until 2020 to remediate the facility to handle the new requirements.

The current facility is just under 20 years old. Mayor Paul Walker asked Pope how long he thought that would keep the town within state guidelines, as they are known to change.

Pope said the state won't ever say it's good for 20 years or so, but they could probably count on some- where between 12 and 20 years before more improve- ments would have to be made. The new upgrade would have to be operational by the end of December 2019.
