Central Lee grad Haynes running for supervisor

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG
PCC EDITOR

DONNELLSON - Economic development, county services, and telecommunications are on the mind of Lee County Supervisor candidate Larry Haynes.

Haynes, a Democrat, is joining Democrat Rich Harlow and Republican James Steffen as candidates for the District 3 Supervisor seat being vacated by Don Hunold at the end of the year. Harlow and Haynes will face off in a primary June 5.

Haynes said after living in more than 20 places he settled in at Central Lee High School where he graduated, attended Southeastern Community College, and then went to work in Lee County. He held positions at the Lee County Youth Services near Charles-ton, then worked at Heintz Electrical in sales, before he went to work for himself in the construction business. His pasttime is riding motorcycles and following his wife who runs 5ks, half and full marathons.

He said his position at the youth services home has encouraged him to give back.

“When I got out of high school I went to work there. I came from that life and wanted to give something back. I’ve been better myself in my life and now I know that I want to help better the county,” Haynes said.

A common theme of all three of the candidates has been the county’s economic development. Haynes said he feels like the $200,000 the county gives the Lee County Economic Development Group is not being well-spent.

“I think all three of us running see the economic development problems in this county. All three of us have talked about that. I don’t think they’re doing the job they need to be doing and we’re giving them $200,000 a year?” Haynes said... "There is nothing that's growing in Lee County, so why do we keep spending that money?"

Haynes pointed to the slow progress of the Mills County Economic Development Group and said he would like to encourage them to give back.

Haynes will face off in a primary June 5 for the District 3 Supervisor seat being vacated by Don Hunold at the end of the year. Harlow and Haynes will face off in a primary June 5.

Sports: FMHS girls take 9th at Pen City Relays.
Play sports for more than scholarship opportunities

By Bob Gardner, Executive Director of the National Federation of State High School Associations and Alan Beste, Executive Director of the Iowa High School Athletic Association

Many parents across America are trying to live the dream through their sons and daughters. It’s a popular dream: Land a college athletic scholarship by prioritizing traveling sports teams or specializing in a single sport year-round.

Unfortunately, most of these dreams are never realized. The odds of a sports scholarship paying for even a portion of a student’s college education are miniscule.

The College Board, a not-for-profit organization comprised of 6,000 of the world’s leading educational institutions, reports that a moderate budget for college students who attend a public university in their state of residence is $25,290 per year. The annual average budget at a private college checks in at $50,900.

Meanwhile, the most recent data from the NCAA reveals that the average Division I athletic scholarship is worth only $10,400. More significantly, the same study shows that fewer than two percent of all high school student-athletes (1 in 54) will ever wear the uniform of an NCAA Division I school.

Even if the dream of getting a college athletic scholarship is realized, parents likely will spend more money on club sports than they will regain through college athletic scholarships. Because of the costs of club fees, equipment, summer camps, playing in out-of-state tournaments, and private coaching, youth sports have become a $15 billion per year industry.

There is another way to get competition, camaraderie, and life lessons from sports, and it’s a financially viable one: Encourage your sons and daughters to participate for their high school.

In education-based high school sports, student-athletes are taught, as the term implies, that grades come first. The lessons learned through high school sports experiences offer insights into leadership, overcoming adversity, and mutual respect that cannot be picked up anywhere else. Coaches in an education-based athletic setting are held accountable by the philosophy, mission, and goals of their school district. And the cost of participating in high school sports is minimal in most cases.

While there is a belief that the only way to get noticed by college coaches is to play on club travel teams year-round, many top-tier Division I football and basketball coaches recently have stated that they are committed to recruiting students who have played multiple sports within the high school setting. They believe there are physical, emotional, and social benefits to being a multi-sport student-athlete.

By focusing on academics while playing sports in a school setting, students can earn scholarships for academics and other talents – skillsets that are oftentimes nurtured while participating in high school activities. These scholarships are more accessible and worth more money than athletic scholarships. While $3 billion per year is available for college athletic scholarships, more than $11 billion is awarded annually in the United States for academic scholarships and other financial assistance.

The Iowa High School Athletic Association firmly believes students will have more fun, make more friends, and be better prepared for life beyond sport by participating in multiple sports and activities offered by their high school.

Silgan Containers is an Equal Opportunity Employer two years, the facility is still a ways away from full capacity.

The county budget is also a concern for Haynes and said the time is right to start looking at what expenses can be cut because of the state pulling back on assistance to local governments. He referenced Ron Fedler’s warning to the county at Tuesday’s Board of Supervisors’ meeting.

“They’re leaving us with a real headache, to be honest,” he said of state legislators. “Each year the tax cost more and more and everyone wants to increase their budgets and there isn’t any money, I don’t think we’re at the extreme that Ron was talking about Tuesday, but I think he was just putting a warning out there for everybody. This is what the group had to decide, not something one person decides.”

Haynes said cutting staff at the jail isn’t the answer. “I hardly ever see them, but if you hear a complaint you’ll see six trucks out there. I don’t think the county knows what they’re doing day-to-day. I do see the maintain- at a lot, however. He said he also doesn’t believe the county needs duplication of services. “I don’t think consolidation is a word we want to be using right now. That is a real divider. When the courthouse failed and I was on that committee, but when the voters spoke and we let that go, I think that was one of the best things we could have done. We heard from the voters and we moved on. I think the county is right where it should be with regard to services.”

However he did say that he would support ending driver’s license services in the county because too many people are already getting their license renewed online and the program bleeds money from the county.

State assistance to local governments is getting thinner and thinner and Haynes said the budget should be adjusted to reflect that despite increasing potential revenues on the horizon from the Iowa Fertilizer Plant and the pipeline that was built two years ago. Aside from pay- ments in lieu of property taxes that increase each five years for the first 20 years while the tax abate- ments expire, natural gas consumption fees will also be charged to the facility and those revenues could land in county coffers…or a portion of them.

“Nobody knows what that revenue from the fertilizer plant is going to be,” he said. “That money, when it starts to come in, I believe after three years, goes to the state and then they send it to the county. That’s how its drawn up anyway. So we don’t know what that will look like and, as far as the pipeline, and I haven’t heard much on that other than there was supposed to be a charge on the amount of product flowing through the pipes.”

He also would like to work with state legislators and help bring that enhanced fiber optics and rural Internet to the area.

“How many businesses opened outside the popu- lation centers in the coun- ty, Harvestville Farms, Appleberry, Fat Jimmy’s, people like that trying to grow their business that can’t get decent rural In- ternet service,” he said. As a supervisor, we should work with that and try to help those people. Who knows what the future will bring and it is worth the effort. I think it is. With all the 1-to-1 school programs with laptops and tablets and students, including SCC students, who can’t go home and get good In- ternet speed. That’s a tough thing and that’s a real divider. When the courthouse failed, and I think the county is right where it should be with regard to services.”

Haynes also said he believes in term limits for certain positions and the county board is one of them.

“I think two terms is sufficient for you to get what you want to get done done. If you can’t get your agenda done in eight years you should pass it along. Term limits would be a good thing to keep ideas fresh.”

He also said mental health is a big problem in the county and said he would like to help the county look for ways to provide a facility closer than the new access cen- ters the state is looking at.

“We, as a county, need to have a house – for bat- tered woman and mental- ly ill. Temporary housing – nothing like we’ve had in the past.”

He said the funding should come from the county’s mental health services budget because the state’s mandating a spend down of those funds and that money is just sitting in the fund.

The mental health fund in this year’s budget has no tax asking so propor- tion taxes will not be used in the that department’s budget in the upcom- ing 2018-19 fiscal year. The department is using the excess funds in the account to fund the year’s activities.
