Residents try to derail Amtrak’s service plans for Fort Madison depot

Board president says board had no hand in discipline

By Chuck Vandenberg

FORT MADISON - More details have come to light regarding the vandalism that currently has approximately 20 seniors banned from walking the stage at the Fort Madison High School graduation on June 2. On Monday school district officials suspended the students and informed them they wouldn’t be allowed to walk the stage at commencement ceremonies, prompting a packed house at Monday night’s FMCSD school board meeting.

Several students and parents made statements to the board pleading for the students to be able to participate in the ceremony. The board however has no role in disciplining students but would serve as a ruling body in any appeal where both sides would be able to present information.

The Fort Madison Police Dept. released a statement on Tuesday just after 3 p.m. outlining the vandalism that was discovered at the school at around 6 a.m. Sunday morning.

According to the release, “school officials arrived at the school and found the front of the school covered with graffiti. The front of the building had at least 20 signatures of students and the front door was defaced with red ink. School officials also discovered that the front of the building was spread with red and white powder, including near the main entrance.”

Mayor wants to know that plan won’t effect route

By Chuck Vandenberg
PCC Editor

FORT MADISON - This was no theater production, but the drama pretty heavy Tuesday afternoon as about 50 residents and policy makers grilled Amtrak officials about going to an automated ticket kiosk in Fort Madison as opposed to a ticket agent.

Ray Lang, the government affairs and communications officer for Amtrak, sat under the bright lights of the Old Fort Players playhouse and took questions from a mostly senior crowd on why local ticket agent Amy Lambert’s position was eliminated last week.

Marc Magliari, another Amtrak spokesman, was also on hand to help field questions.

Elected officials including Mayor Brad Randolph, City Councilman Bob Morawitz, who is also running for the Iowa House, Councilman Chris Greenwald, State Senator Rich Taylor, State Rep. Jerry Kears, and Jared Herschberger from U.S. Rep. Dave Loebsack’s office were all in attendance.

While several of those in attendance applauded Lambert’s work as a ticket agent in helping them through difficulties of travel and making sure their itineraries and baggage were handled correctly, the elected officials were also concerned about how not having someone on staff at the depot would effect numbers of riders.

Randolph, who has been working with Amtrak on behalf of the city in an effort to get the city’s depot moved back to Riverview Park, told Lang he had a concern that not having a

Residents say Amtrak losing riders with service changes

I'm still hung up on the dang luggage. When I get to LA and I want to come back here do I have to carry it with me for four hours while I sit in the station.

-Susan Chaney

Amtrak Rider

Suppose to already be here through federal subsidies," she said.

Chaney complained that without someone checking her bags or helping her with her bags it makes it difficult for her to travel.

"I'm still hung up on the dang luggage. When I get to LA and I want to get on the train to come back here do I have to carry it with me for four hours while I sit in the station," Chaney said.

Morawitz said the city is trying to become a destination and is hoping the new depot would be part of the process. He said not having the service for the riders has an impact on the city and not just the railroad.

Lambert said the money for her position was included in the federal subsidy based on the budget prepared which included the ticket agents.

"Every year Amtrak goes to the government with the amount of money they're asking for in a subsidy. What percent of money did Amtrak get?" she asked Lang.

Lang said they got the full amount.

"That money has already been allocated under the pretense that this is what it's being used for," Lambert said. "And now these agents aren't in those positions, because that money is being hoarded for the prodigal child on the northeast corner."

Lang said the two funding accounts, one for Northeast and one for the system, are separate accounts and can't be shared.

After the meeting Magliari said the turnout of the meeting was very good and there are clearly some things Amtrak can do to try and help make things better in Fort Madison such as implementing a train-side baggage check.

"We need to look at that sooner than later. Even if it's not perfect, if there's something we can do to help here we should try that."
