Lee County - A new road surfacing program using disposed shingles has some rural Lee County residents shouting from the rooftops.

The program, which was brought to the Lee County Board of Supervisors by Great River Regional Waste Authority Director Wade Hamm, is proving to be a dust-free alternative to the typical gravel or sealant programs.

Supervisor Gary Folluo commended the Lee County Secondary Roads Department on Tuesday for the work that has been done at the intersections of Valley and Hilton roads, and Valley and Johnson Street roads, both just west of Keokuk city limits.

The intersections are now a mix of ground up shingles and gravel at about a 2 to 1 ratio. Hamm, who was down at the Valley and Hilton road intersection, pointed to a dump truck coming down the road on the Valley Road headed south kicking up a bunch of dust, but when it hit the new shingle gravel mix, the dust dissipated.

"That's what this program does," Hamm said. "You saw that dust just go away once the truck hit that new surface."

To date, the county has applied about 900 tons of the mixture on the two intersections which total just over a mile combined. The cost to the city for the mixture is about $20/ton or about $18,000 so far. But Lee County’s Assistant Engineer, Ben Hull, said the county has been cleaning information from other counties, including Scott County, and the new mixture in that county has lasted five years or better with little to no maintenance.

The mixture is grained in with existing gravel and county crews don’t need to roll the surface during application. Hamm said vehicle travel will compress the surface because the shingles are made of asphalt which warms and becomes the binder of the surface.

Hull also said the surface doesn’t "washboard," which is when cars experience rapid bumping when approaching an intersection, nor are they showing potholes. Hull said the county wants to watch the progress of the two intersections through the winter and, then in the spring, make decisions on how to move forward, including doing other intersections.

County resident Mary Van Pelt suggested the intersection at Airport and Middle roads where Central Lee students who are open-enrolled from other districts are transferred onto buses would be a good place to start.

"We want to watch this," Walker said. "The big thing is the kids trust in me and I trust in them. But when the kids start trusting their teammates, that's when this will go a long ways."

Walker comes from a steeped background in baseball including volunteering with several area high schools and then spent many years with Justin Schulte, the current head baseball coach at Southeastern Community College. Schulte and Walker organized the baseball academy. He played high school, college, and semi-pro levels of baseball during his playing days.

"Coach Schulte was the pitching coach at SCC when I was there in 1997-98. He came back to be the head coach in 2006 and we've stayed in touch since then. I was around the SCC program a day here and a day there and then I started being there for drills and part of the recruiting process and made calls on behalf of the program to potential recruits," Walker said.

He then modeled a traveling youth baseball squad off the SCC program called the Junior Blackhawks. Walker enjoyed working with the younger players and passed on a couple offers to coach at the high school level, because his job and family requirements made the timing poor. Walker is the general manager for Great River Plumbing in Fort Madison and said the flexibility in his schedule now allows him the time to devote to a high school team.

He said, despite the last few years' struggles, people in Fort Madison need to remember that the team will be celebrating the 20th anniversary of the Bloodhounds' state title next year. -Wade Hamm

FORT MADISON - Inheriting a program that has won just nine games in the past four years combined screams you have nowhere to go but up.

Fort Madison’s Ron Walker, who helped put together the Southeast Iowa Baseball Training Academy, was announced Monday as the new Fort Madison High School head baseball coach. He replaces Ken Steples who was let go after this spring’s season.

Walker said he’s got a roster of players from last year and every one of the players is as good as the other at this point.

"I think we’ll be in fine shape. Moving forward, the kids have to believe in what they’re doing and trust the system," Walker said. "The big thing is the kids trust in me and I trust in them. But when the kids start trusting their teammates, that’s when this will go a long ways."

what happens with those surfaces that we’re testing,” Hull said. “We’re hearing great things out of Scott County, and the other good thing is we’re starting where they are and they’ve been researching for about three years now.”

Scott County has used mixtures ranging from 1-to-1 ratios all the way to 3-to-1 ratios in shingle to gravel. Hamm said the benefit to GRWWA is that it keeps shingles out of the landfill which extends the life of the landfills. Currently, GRWWA accepts all shingles at no charge as long as foreign materials, outside of the nails, are removed.

“The shingles can have nails in them because they just get ground up and become part of the mixture but other materials need to be separated. As long as they’ve done that, there is no charge for dumping the shingles,” he said.

He said he’s sent about 1,500 tons of shingles to Gray for grinding and has about another 400 tons on hand. Considering it takes about 900 tons to do just over a mile at the current mix ratio, the county would be hard pressed to find enough to cover all its rural roads.

“The supply will never be enough that we will ever be able to do all the miles of gravel road in the county. It’s going to be something where we selectively choose locations to use this material on,” Hull told the board.

The shingles are picked up and hauled to Gray Quarries in Hamilton where they are ground up and then sold back at the per ton charge. Folluo said he wanted to give Hamm credit for bringing the idea to the attention of the board. “He put the bug in our ear about doing this project and I think it’s worked out real good so far.”

In other action, the board:

• voted 4-0 to approve an amendment to the county’s bid policy regarding emergency repairs purchases in which the chairman of the supervisors can authorize purchases or contractors for emergency repairs for any public improvements. The chairman would make a finding of necessity and obtain a certificate from a licensed engineer that the repair is immediately necessary and then either take action or call a telephonic or in-person meeting of the board to address any issues without holding a public hearing or advertising for bids.
• voted 4-0 to approve a final change order for tuck pointing on the South Lee County Courthouse which resulted in a decrease in the final bill of approximately $4,000.
• voted 4-0 to approve the replacement of a part-time correctional officer who left the jail staff for a position in Henry County.
Walker brings pitch-by-pitch mentality to Hounds championship in 2000. “We need to put baseball back on the map in Fort Madison,” Walker said. “Not just three months of the year, but 12 months of the year. We’ve got a lot of great athletes that can bring people back out to the ballpark.”

He said his first goal out of the gate is to spruce up the school facilities. He wants to schedule a fall clean up at the park where students, parents, and volunteers can help brighten up the field and create a sense of pride in the team again. He said he doesn’t have a date set, but will try to work that out with school officials once school is back in session.

Walker said that not being a teacher-coach will present some hurdles that some other coaches don’t have to deal with and he won’t have the five-day-a-week access to players and potential players that teacher-coaches have.

“I want to start talking to the kids early and get them to think about baseball and buying into the program,” he said. “We need to take pride in wearing that Bloodhound jersey. It’s an honor in wearing it and not just not going through the motions.”

He said baseball is a game of pitches and the team needs to learn that they have to deal with and he wants to work that out with school officials once school is back in session.

Walker said he is joining a group of new coaches in the 2018 levels. He said the community needs to learn that they have to deal with and he wants to work that out with school officials once school is back in session.

The last thing I want to do is step on other programs,” Walker said. “I want to work with them all. I definitely want to get with Derek (Doherty) and talk about the athletic enhancement program and how the baseball program can benefit from what they are doing.

He said the first time he can practice with the team isn’t until April 29, 2019, but he said he wants to set up some meetings and get with the kids and new FMHS Activities Director Jeremy Swink and start building relationships. He also welcomed parents and potential players to the baseball program after Erin Brenner resigned last fall.

He said one of the other things he wants to do out of the gate is meet with the other coaches about programming.

“The last thing I want to do is step on other programs,” Walker said. “I want to work with them all. I definitely want to get with Derek (Doherty) and talk about the athletic enhancement program and how the baseball program can benefit from what they are doing.

He said the first time he can practice with the team isn’t until April 29, 2019, but he said he wants to set up some meetings and get with the kids and new FMHS Activities Director Jeremy Swink and start building relationships. He also welcomed parents and potential interested parties to reach out to him at run.4great@gmail.com.

Swink said four candidates applied for the position.

“We had four candidates,” Swink said. “It was a very tough choice as our last player in the dugout.

“We’ve only as good as our last player in the dugout,” Walker said.

“Team chemistry is very important and baseball isn’t an individual sport by any means. They need to trust in each other.”

Over the past four years the Hounds have nine of 129 games and with Burlington looking to join the Southeast Conference next year, Fort Madison will have a greater chance of putting up more wins without as much travel.

Walker said he isn’t coming to the team with any preconceived notions about what the program will look like.

“I want to develop my own opinion, based on kids and their desire to play the game. We’re starting fresh here and every kid is on an even playing field as far as I’m concerned,” Walker said.

He said the community just needs to look about 90 miles down the road to Centerville, which just won a state championship.

“They won with young kids. The program is what’s solid.”

Walker is joining a group of new coaches in the 2018 season including Todd McGhghy taking over the girls high school basketball program from Charlie Knapp, who resigned last year but will coach middle school girls this year. Mike Schneider and Chad Hannum are splitting the head coaching duties for the boys high school track program after Erin Brenner resigned last fall.

He said one of the other things he wants to do out of the gate is meet with the other coaches about programming.
