FORT MADISON - For close to a decade, Fort Madison’s Main Street has been serving up five-course meals as part of an award-winning fundraiser in downtown Fort Madison.

After foregoing the spring edition of Sensational Chefs, Main Street volunteers opened up SiP, who offered the space for the Saturday evening festivities to the warm smells of food prepared celebrity chef Savannah Collier of Fort Madison.

Collier, the coordinator for the Fort Madison Chamber of Commerce, didn’t just fill the role. She has a couple years of formal training, a lifetime of informal training compliments of mom Sheri Hawk. Hawk was in the kitchen with Collier helping put the event together.

The night’s courses consisted of an opening appetizer of cucumber hummus bites, then followed with a spinach, tortellini, and sausage soup. Then guests were treated to a salad that Collier said she found on Google.

Then the dinner started with a wild game of pork, served with meadowsweet butter and homemade sourdough bread. From the main course, Collier treated the crowd to an herb crusted salmon, served with a garlic beurre blanc sauce and a wild rice pilaf.

The night finished with a chocolate dessert of flourless chocolate cake, served with a homemade chocolate hazelnut sorbet and a bottle of whipped cream.

Tuesday elections should be tight races

People have been at the door knocking a couple times a week. Democrats mostly, trying to shore up votes. I’m a registered Democrat, but I would have had conversations with foot soldiers of Republican candidates.

I know who I’m voting for in the major races and believe in the sanctity of going to the polls. I have this huge pet-peeve with people trying to manipulate me. As consumers of all things, we’re bombarded on a daily basis with manipulators, but there’s something about someone trying to convince me to vote early that bugs me.

I’ve had the chance to sit down with each candidate and interact with the inoculation and maybe I should consider not running. I took her advice. The following day the swelling went down. No more running and Exercise. We have our own hens so have plenty of farm fresh eggs. We cut out the carbohydrates (bread, potatoes and sweets), concentrated on protein and 30 minutes of aerobic exercise daily and, as of race day, my sobriety birthday, I have officially lost, count’m, 45 lbs!

I hadn’t run a race in four, maybe five years. The last race I ran, I had gotten a flu and pneumonia shot the day before. Following the race I felt sick to my stomach, cut myself to smithereens, and almost bled to death.

An Iowa tornado ripping through a slump, laying the ground work for reconstruction, my whole life changed for the better. They say you have to hit bottom.

I didn’t run a race in four, maybe five years. The last race I ran, I had gotten a flu and pneumonia shot the day before. Following the race I felt sick to my stomach, cut myself to smithereens, and almost bled to death.

It’s time to elect those politicians that aren’t party driven

But the timing seemed to be a little politically convenient. We passed on the event as our fairness doctrine would have required a Republican event to balance. Rest assured we’ll continue to write on the successes of our schools and their respective programs.

However, Kurtz appears to be the candidate who will step up across lines and is willing to look and listen to his better angels and not the demons of party loyalty. He’s certainly from a blue-collar background and understands the importance of collective bargaining, the hassles of privatized health care, and the importance of funding public education, among other things. He also has many years working in the capital on behalf of railroad workers.

I found Jeff Reichman to be engaging, informed, and concerned about southeast Iowa. His push for more funding for vocational programs and taking a hard look at the diminishing value of a college education are attractive stances. But he does appear to be spooked by a bit on several important issues, like public education funding, IPERS, and privatized health care. He, and Jim Steffen, who I’ll get to next, both had almost the exact same lines on college graduation rates and privatized health care. With all that being said, that race is a pick’ em and I genuinely believe both men would represent this part of the state well.

The race between Steffen and Democrat Rich Harlow is one of the most puzzling, but Harlow may seem to be the best choice simply because he’s been at the meetings. Steffen has declined to attend meetings because he didn’t “want to get into that drama” but he said he’s kept up with all the documentation and minutes. But there’s something to be said about someone who doesn’t want to go through the drama of the meeting, until he’s elected. That’s where the sausage is made. You miss a lot not being in there.

Harlow, despite some questionable sign placements that prompted warnings from election officials, will tell you over and over how concerned he is about the people of Lee County and wants to help those people. Anyone running for election wants to help, but he’s shown through actions his commitment. It was election time and people seize opportunities when their name is on the ballot. But it was the only real glimpse we got of the candidates in action.

Steffen’s military record and stories of his tours, as well as Riechman’s decades serving his country, aren’t lost on those of us who live under the blankets of freedoms they helped provide. But politics is engagement, and Steffen missed an important opportunity to show the voters his engagement, despite apparent efforts behind the scenes. Politicians don’t always work behind the scenes.

So cast your ballot, that’s the important thing. Elections have never been more important. Don’t go to the polls because of what is written here, but do some homework and cast your ballot for the person you believe will make dinner table conversations more like your liking.

In case you haven’t been following along, Holy Trinity head volleyball coach Melissa Freesmeier is taking her Crusaders to their ninth straight state tournament appearance. First round starts Wednesday night against a No. 7 Montezuma squad that dismantled New London on Tuesday night. Action starts at 8 p.m. at the U.S. Cellular Center in Cedar Rapids - but that’s Beside the Point.

Collier dishes up family recipes for Main Street fundraiser as something different she hadn't created before.

“It was a salad I found online and I thought it looked really good. It has pears, goat cheese, craisins, and maple balsamic dressing over spring greens,” Collier said. “The dressing is very different and I was nervous about it, but it is actually very good.”

A garlic butter asparagus went with the entree of Chicken Cordon Bleu and twice baked potatoes, which were followed up with caramel cheesecake bites and coffee.

“Chicken Cordon Bleu was one of my favorite meals growing up because of my mom. It’s kind of a spin off hers and that was one of my favorite things of hers growing up,” she said. “I knew I wanted to do the chicken, but the other things I Googled because I wanted a lighter soup due to the heavy entree. The salad I just wanted something different and this is pretty different.”

Aside from hanging around her mom’s apron in the kitchen growing up and then more as an adult, Collier graduated from Iowa State University with a degree in hospitality management. That degree she said focused on restaurants, but she’s used the degree to foster a career in event planning with various organizations including the Amana Colonies and now the Fort Madison Chamber.

“I’ve kind of always been in the kitchen because of my mom. She was always cooking when I was growing up,” Collier said. “And then when I went to college I took a lot of food courses at Iowa State. I did a simple food class and then a quantity food course, where we actually ran a restaurant in the bottom of our main building. We ran that and I really got into cooking then.”

She said planning and preparing the meal, which she said took about 10 days to pull together, brought her back to her college experiences and she realized how tough running a restaurant can be.

“And I don’t know that I could do this all the time. It’s a lot of work. It’s intense. Events are too, but my gosh this is really tough,” she said.

Denicia Wright, the coordinator of Fort Madison Main Street, said information about the event went out about three weeks ago and the meal sold out quickly.

Several local businesses jumped in to help the event as well. Lee County Bank was the premier sponsor of the night. Fareway and Hy-Vee donated red and white wines and Swed Coffee provided after dinner coffees for the patrons.

Members of the Fort Madison Main Street board served the courses and worked the rooms, talking about the downtown program.

Main Street Coordinator Denicia Wright said the event will raise about $1,500 outside of the sponsorships.

“This sold out in less than a week and, in fact, we oversold. We were only supposed to sell 25 but we end up selling 30, which was fantastic. It made it a little tight in there than we expected,” Wright said.

She said plans are in the works to bring some different ideas to the fundraiser in order to freshen up the event.

“We usually do two a year, we had to cancel the spring and just did the fall one. But next year we’ve got some new things geared up to呼吸 some new life into it and hopefully we’ll have a really great chef in the spring. We’re waiting to hear back from him.”

Gulberg featured FMAAA November artist

BY BRIAN RIGGS
FMAA-Swarm

Annie Swarm Gulberg is the feature artist at Ft. Madison Area Arts Association this November bringing “Dreamlands and More” with her. This vibrant world of oil color and texture welcomes you in from the crisp cold, warming you with a style to cozy up to like a warm cup. Reception for Annie occurs November 9th from 5–7pm at 825 Avenue G. Sunnybrook of Ft. Madison is the sponsor for the exhibition. Annie will finalize the Lunch-a-la-Art program year with a talk on November 30th at noon.

Annie has returned to her hometown of Mt. Pleasant after 16 years in Milwaukee. She graduated with a BA in Art from Wisconsin Lutheran College and worked in the printing/publishing industry. Like many from small rural towns, she gravitated back to her initial roots to raise her two sons with husband Nils. She offers art lessons in her studio in Mt. Pleasant. She loves the rich, vibrant color of oil. and Her love of painting, as well as encouragement from a wonderful art teacher, sent her to college for that source in the first place.

Annie has created her own wonderland environments based on Dreamlands. “Those places in our minds, dreams and hearts that are connected to reality or based on a real place, but transformed with our interpretation. Adding vibrancy and fantasy with thick paint and bright colors, these are the landscapes we remember when we close our eyes.” For Annie the business always begins with the color, than texture, than subject matter. She reflects, “I always simplify shapes...it adds to the mystery, not just as you see it. It leads one to more interpretation. ”

Viewing available all month Tuesday-Saturday from 10am-5pm.

A run to celebrate sobriety

did then, and I did this time, too. Wanting to look my best on race day, I went out and bought a new warm-up suit. With temps in the 40’s at the start of the race, the warm-up suit felt great. For running the race, I had selected a long-sleeved Iowa State shirt, which is taking a risk in Hawkeye country, Burlington. However, with both Iowa and Iowa State ranked nationally, no one gave me grief.

At the Miles and Memories 5k (3.1 miles), I failed to place in my age group since runners 60 and over are all lumped together. But, hey, I ran my first race in years, on my sobriety birthday. I’ll take that to the bank any day. My plans are to run a few more 5ks, get my time down to a respectable pace, then try some 10ks, then half-marathons, then...eh forget it.

Ginnie and I went out for dinner and a movie with some friends after the race. I won’t mention any names, but there’s a restaurant in Yarmouth that has some mouth-watering food and classic atmosphere. The movie we selected was “Bohemian Rhapsody”, about rock group, Queen. It’s an outstanding movie, and one of Queen’s signature songs I thought quite appropriate for my sobriety celebration. “We are the champions, my friends. And we’ll keep on fighting ‘til the end.” The tune is still in my head. Here’s to 20 more years of sobriety and happiness!
