Supervisors to consider ATV/UTV ordinance

BY CHUCK VANDENBERG

LEE COUNTY — Supervisors will cast their first vote on a proposed ATV/UTV county ordinance at Tuesday’s regular Board of Supervisors meeting.

The ordinance is being proposed to control the use of the vehicles on county secondary roads, and will add a Chapter 6 to Title 4 of the current county code specifically addressing the regulation and permitting of the vehicles.

It also puts a definition on an ATV, a UTV, as well as defining roadways where they vehicles are allowed to be driven.

UTV are utility terrain vehicle or utility task vehicle. ATV is an all-terrain vehicle. ATVs are typically smaller and meant for a single rider, sometimes equipped for a passenger. ATV's typically are used for sport while UTV can be built for up to four people and are built for heavier workloads.

ATVs typically have a handlebar system whereas UTVs employ a steering wheel.

According to the language of the code, the vehicles would be allowed on county secondary roads, with the exception of Level C roads. Riders would also be allowed to cross paved roads and may operate on paved roads only to the nearest gravel road if no direct crossing exists.

Partnerships key to CTE curriculum

FORT MADISON — With state education funding a bit better this year, but still pretty tight overall, partnerships with communities are a key part of growing high school CTE programs.

With February being National Career and Technical Education month, local school officials honored area technical partners with a breakfast reception on Friday morning.

Fort Madison High School Principal Greg Smith welcomed local officials including State Rep. Jeff Kurtz (D-Fort Madison), City Councilman Bob Morawitz, several FMCSD school board members, and community business partners.

Smith thanked them for getting the program back to where it is over the past eight years, but didn't shy away from saying their support will be critical to keeping the programs moving.

"Obviously without the support of Superintendent Dr. (Erin) Slater and Dr. (Tim) Wondra from our board, we wouldn't be where we are. In this day in age, there's no money, there's just support. But without that support these programs go away," Smith said.

He also extended a thank you to Lee County Economic Development Group for their partnerships in helping create programming that feeds into and off of the CTE efforts at the local level.

Smith, the former director of Student Services, took over as principal at the high school in 2011. He said at that time, the CTE curriculum was almost non-existent.

"When I started here eight years ago, they had almost gone away and were continuing to leak out. Luckily for us, we've got the right people on board and they are thriving again, and they are a real success for us here.

ATV code violations would carry fines

The vehicles are only allowed on county roadways between the hours of 4 a.m. and 10 p.m. The vehicles must all run with lighted head and tail lights, display an orange slow moving vehicle flag, and must run single file. Three-wheel ATVs are prohibited.

Drivers must have a valid driver’s license and be at least 18 years of age. Vehicles cannot exceed 35 mph and ATVs cannot carry a passenger.

The vehicles must also be registered with the Iowa Department of Natural Resources and must carry insurance with minimums of $50K bodily injury per person, $100K bodily injury per accident, and $50K property damage.

The driver must also be able to produce a Lee County permit issued at the county recorder’s office. Permits will be good for one year from Jan. 1 through Dec. 31. Violations of the ordinance are simple misdemeanors with minimum fines of $200 for a first offense of the ordinance; $400 for a second offense; and $625 for a third or subsequent offense. Anything beyond a second offense could also include up to 30 days in jail.

Additionally, the ordinance provides for a suspension or revocation of permits at the discretion of the Lee County Sheriff.

The ordinance would go into effect after a third reading and publication of the language.

High school, college programs give hope to industries

Smith said many of the CTE classes have waiting lines to get in, which speaks to the transition that's taking place.

Jason Huffman of Huffman Welding & Manufacturing said it's a program like Fort Madison's that gave Huffman's reason to be optimistic about a future workforce. Prior to the refocus on trades that is underway at FMHS, his family's company had concern.

"It was scary. We were telling people weekly that in 15 years our shop won't be here because no one is going into these trades. There was just no program," Huffman said.

He said Southeastern Community College rebooted a machining programming several years ago and programs like that and at FMHS are helping create a pipeline for future machinists and welders.

"The motivation in taking this position and looking at the education side of things is that we need to get up with the times. Cars have become so technical. There are computers and electronics in cars and, if we want to educate and train for entry level jobs, we need to go in that direction," Gerdes said.

"It's easy to make auto shop a restoration program, and that's great if that's what you want to do. But jobwise and marketwise there's not that many jobs in restoration," Gerdes said.

Smith said he's working on a curriculum for what the automotive department will look like. He's also compiling a list of equipment he will need and getting an inventory of what the district already has.

He said there's not an auto certification at the high school level. But he said most employers will look for an ASE, or Automotive Service Excellence. A lot of employees work toward that certification while they're on the job.

"There are good paying jobs available in the field that don't require four years of education. It's a matter of getting the basics to step into a job and learn the trade," he said.

State Rep. Jeff Kurtz said the state should be looking at how to coordinate the efforts of the state's universities and colleges, and the CTE programs in schools like Fort Madison.

"At the end of the day it's about hands-on experience. Can we provide all that in the classroom? Probably not. But we can partner with people and have advanced classes where we may be able to but advanced students in a shop."

"Our side is hoping we can get people trained and they could get good jobs and have a good quality of life," Kurtz said.

"In a time when we give $600 million in tax credits, and not all of those are bad, we're letting education go. We voted for a 3% increase in education funding at that just barely gets us kick started toward progress. 2.06 just slows the slide."

Kurtz said administrators like Smith are the ones to keep moving the program forward.

"A week or two after I announced I was going to run, I got a hold of Greg and said, 'OK, we need to sit down and you need to educate me on education,' and this is one of the first things we talked about," Kurtz said.

Currently FMHS has 240 students in CTE programs and 30 courses in the curriculum.
