Mayor befuddled on sidewalk bid disparity

Randolph not ready to give up on Avenue G sidewalk project

FORT MADISON – City officials revealed Thursday that a bid on a sidewalk improvement project that was supposed to result in new curbs and sidewalks for a good portion of Avenue G came in 146% over engineering estimates. Fort Madison Mayor Brad Randolph said Wednesday night that one bid came in for the work at $3.2 million to get three blocks of Avenue G done on both sides. Engineering estimates were about $1.4 million for the project.

HR Green Inc., of Cedar Rapids has been ushering the project for the city and Randolph said he wants answers on where the disparity in the bids and HR Green’s estimates came from.

“My really at a loss,” Randolph said Wednesday night. “I’m disappointed in the whole process and I’m trying to figure out what went wrong. For them to stand in front of the council and say that and be off by almost $2 million is unfathomable.”

He said the city’s spent about $100,000 on the project already and he wants something for that money. Randolph met with City Manager David Varley Wednesday morning about the project and said at 7:30 a.m. it was a dead project.

But similar to the Amtrak Depot relocation that was almost swept away by the council during budget talks, Randolph said he’s not ready to give up on the project.

“As of this morning, the project was DOA and that’s not acceptable. We’re going back to the engineer and find out the reason for the disparity between HR Green’s estimates and what the city’s bid was.”

O’Rourke’s presidential run kicks off in Lee County

LEE COUNTY – Packed coffee houses and sandwich shops in Lee County were the springboard of a national news cycle introducing Beto O’Rourke to the 2020 Presidential race, as well as to the state of Iowa.

O’Rourke, a Democrat from Texas who garnered national fame by nearly knocking off Ted Cruz for the U.S. Senate last year, stepped out of the shadows of that slim 2.6% defeat back into the national spotlight with a campaign he says is for “all the people.”

O’Rourke, in three different Lee County campaign stops Thursday morning, repeated what will assuredly be a stump message going forward that he doesn’t care what party you’re from, he’s running for everyone. He served in the House of Representatives for six years from 2013 – 2019.

BE COLORECTAL CANCER AWARE

IT COULD SAVE YOUR LIFE!

Thanks to improvements in prevention, early detection and treatment, more than a million people in the US count themselves as survivors of colorectal cancer.

Colorectal cancer always starts with a small growth polyp, which if found early, can be removed – stopping colorectal cancer before it starts.

A colonoscopy done by FMCH General Surgeon Dr. Riggs Bagan or Dr. Rachel Knudson, is one option to find the polyps and remove them at the same time.

So if you are a person over the age of 50 talk to your health care provider about getting screened and become Colorectal Cancer Aware.

State graduation rate edges up to all-time high

DES MOINES – Iowa’s high school graduation rate edged up in 2018 to an all-time high of 91.4 percent, underscoring long-term progress, according to figures released today by the Iowa Department of Education.

“This latest success is directly tied to our strong K-12 education system and Iowa’s innovative, engaging approach to education, which shapes the lives of our young people as well as the economic vitality of our state,” said Gov. Reynolds. “We’re transforming how students learn by connecting what they’re taught in the classroom to the career opportunities that a 21st century economy demands.”

“High school graduation is a critical step for all students because it opens the door to postsecondary education and training opportunities,” Iowa Department of Education Director Ryan Wise said. “I’m pleased to see our graduation rates are up, reinforcing that our long-term trend is on the rise. This is a testament to the state’s committed educators and the roadmap we have in place for education.”

State data show 91.4 percent of students in Iowa’s Class of 2018 graduated within four years, up from 91 percent for the Class of 2017. Since 2011, Iowa’s four-year graduation rate has climbed 3.1 percentage points overall, with significant long-term gains in nearly every student demographic subgroup (see chart below). For example, graduation rates for Hispanic students have increased 8.7 percentage points and African American students have increased 8.1 percentage points since 2011.

The State Board of Education has set a 95 percent goal for the statewide graduation rate. Today’s graduation rate data should not be confused with data released in January by the National Center for Education Statistics, which showed that Iowa leads the nation in graduation rates for the 2016-17 school year.

Iowa graduation rates are calculated with a formula established by the U.S. Department of Education. Unique student identification numbers allow school districts to account for all ninth-grade students as they move through high school. At the state level, the method helps determine when a student graduates, even if the student has switched districts in Iowa during high school. Iowa’s five-year graduation rate – which reflects students who were part of a graduating class but took an extra year to finish high school – was 93.3 percent for the Class of 2017, down slightly from 93.4 percent for the Class of 2016.

Iowa’s annual dropout rate reflects the percentage of students in grades 9-12 who drop out of school during a single year. The annual dropout rate edged down to 2.67 percent during the 2017-18 school year from 2.83 percent for the previous school year.

O’Rourke makes stop at FMHS

Presidential candidate Beto O’Rourke gives a scratch behind the ear to FMHS Bloodhound "Roxie" on Thursday before meeting with staff and students at the Fort Madison High School. O’Rourke announced his candidacy nationally that morning.

O’Rourke said partnerships between high schools and community colleges around the country is just one way to help reduce the staggering $1.3 trillion in student loan debt in America.

“I would like to see more high schools partner with community colleges to offer certification tracks,” O’Rourke said. “This goes right to what Mr. King said in their welding class. He kept saying over and over, "Debt Free." These vocational programs are having an impact on jobs and careers for the students and whether programs are in place for certification.

O’Rourke took a quick tour of the school and chatted with trades instructor Clint Kobelt, Spanish teacher Ryan Smith, Science teacher Mike Rieck, and welding instructor Jim King. He also randomly popped into a few classrooms to wave to students.

He questioned Kobelt and King about how the school’s vocational programs are impacting on jobs and careers for the students and whether programs are in place for certification.

O’Rourke said partnerships between high schools and community colleges around the country is just one way to help reduce the staggering $1.3 trillion in student loan debt in America.

“Whatever that expense, I guarantee it is a hell of a lot less than what we pay to lose the people in our lives... to lose the productivity of Americans who are now well enough to go to work,” he said. "Let’s make sure we spread those costs out more equitably. The dividends we receive on the investment we make in health care for veterans and those "other than honorably discharged" will be a topic of his campaign as well.

"First impressions last. A beautiful smile helps make a great first impression. Make sure yours does.

Candidate hits all democrat talking points on swing

"It's nice really, to be recognized by a bigger name candidate. It shows we're important in the election process," he said. "Fort Madison is fairly older population and we have concerns that need to be heard."

Just before leaving for Burlington, when asked why he chose to announce in Lee County, in a state he'd never visited before, O'Rourke said it didn't make sense to announce in a red state like Texas.

"The people of southeast Iowa are the type of people we need to start this campaign with. They have a history of influence in presidential campaigns and we were thrilled to be able to start here today," he said.

When pressed on the issue of trade, specifically China, O'Rourke said Trump's goal with China is sound, but his methods are not the way of a world leader.

He said Trump has alienated every single trading partner the U.S. has, and then confronted one of the largest economies in the world.

"It's the largest market for soybeans, for corn, for what we produce in Iowa and Texas. I want us to be successful in holding China accountable. I want to make sure we are as competitive as possible for what we grow and produce in the United States. In order to do that, we have to bring to bear every ally we have."

In Fort Madison, O'Rourke answered a question about public school teachers where the country should step in. He said more needs to be done to make sure teachers have just one job — educating our children, not two or even three jobs that some teachers in Texas are holding down to just to make ends meet.

"Our educators need a true living wage so they can focus on one job, as well as providing a health care system they can depend on, and our retired teachers can afford a life of dignity," he said.

At all the events, O'Rourke pushed the issue of climate change and said the world has about 12 years to take "incredibly bold action" to save the planet.

"It's only a matter of degrees," he said. "Along this trajectory, there will be people who can no longer live in the cities they call home today. There is food grown in this country that will no longer prosper in these soils. We'll have mass migrations of 100s of millions of people from lands that are inhabitable today, that will be under water."

"This is our final chance. Scientists are absolutely unanimous on this. We have no more than 12 years to take incredibly bold action on this crisis."

After leaving Fort Madison's Sub-Arena, O'Rourke headed to Burlington for another opening day rally at a coffee shop downtown.

New Year. Fresh Start.

Thank you to all our customers who worked to reduce their environmental footprint last year.

We're looking forward to helping you continue your efforts and to educating our communities on more ways to help this year.

Here are just a few ways you can help:

- Don't put plastic bags in recycling bins
- Rinse & clean all food jars & cans before recycling
- Flatten empty boxes for better storage & volume reduction
- Place all recyclables loose in bins
- Don't recycle wrapping paper
- Properly dispose of all electronics and household hazardous waste

tween what they say we can do it for, and what can be done with that project."

According to the bid submitted, there were too many unknowns in what would be found under the surface of the current sidewalks.

Randolph said it’s his understanding that there were a lot of unknowns in the design in terms of the membrane, building foundations, and basements. Those unknowns made it difficult for the contractors to bid it.

But the mayor said, similar to the depot project he wasn’t ready yet to give up on the project and would like to get something done downtown.

“That sidewalk project was a good seed. It wasn’t taking anything from the general fund. It was saved interest that we had to pay and we could put it back into the community,” he said.

Funds for the project were a reimbursement of interest paid on the city’s wastewater treatment plant rehab and the funds can only be used on projects that further mitigate storm water drainage.

Because the project is overseen by the Iowa Department of Natural Resources there are restrictions on how the project is handled.

“There’s limits to where you can use it (funding). In my opinion, when you’re trying to maximize on what the community would get back, that sidewalk project is the best possible scenario,” Randolph said.

“It gives us the biggest impact. I think we should not give up on it until we have to and I’m not convinced we do that yet.”

He said the city wanted to use area contractors if possible, but bidding may have to be opened to larger cities to see if another firm can come in with a better price point on the project.

“That’s why the local contractors are not comfortable – should we open it up. I think we should to get the job done and try to find someone with that expertise that’s willing to take on the project,” he said.

He said other projects have been discussed that would fit the parameters of the funding stream, but he isn’t willing to take that step.

“There’s been some talk about other projects it could be used for,” he said. “But I don’t think we should approach those until I’m absolutely convinced that the sidewalk project is not going to happen.”
