Gabbard makes stop at Sub Arena

National Guard Major touts foreign policy clout in southeast Iowa swing

FORT MADISON – Another of the current 16 Democratic candidates for the 2020 Presidential election made a stop at Fort Madison’s popular sandwich shop Sub Arena.

U.S. Rep. Tulsi Gabbard (D-Hawaii) made an hour long stop at the eatery Wednesday afternoon on a swing through southeastern Iowa, including stops at Fairfield and Burlington.

Presidential hopeful Beto O’Rourke made a stop at the shop after meeting with high school students to announce his candidacy for the office in February.

In the current field of 16 Democratic candidates, Gabbard is currently running 10th in cash on hand with $2.8 million, but she’s faring slightly better in a grass roots fundraising with 58% of her cash coming in the form of donations of $200 or less, according to a report in the Wall Street Journal.

Gabbard, who is a Major in the Hawaiian Army National Guard, was first elected to Congress in 2012 and touts her foreign policy experience. She rails against President Donald Trump’s campaign for regime changes in places like Venezuela, saying the country has much better use of our resources.

“I’m the only candidate that’s bringing foreign policy to the forefront of this conversation and as long we continue to spend trillions on regime change wars in this nuclear arms race era, we will not have the resources we need to keep American people safe, and to invest in serving the needs of our people in communities like Fort Madison,” she said after addressing about 30 people at the sandwich shop.

City may give up Rashid building

FORT MADISON – City officials are considering donating the former Idol Rashid Library building to the Fort Madison Food Pantry.

The building is currently the home of the pantry, as well as the Fort Madison office of the United Way of the Great River Region, but it is city property donated to the city by the Rashid family.

City Manager David Varley indicated that he has had conversations with the regional Head Start program about possibly purchasing the building. According to Varley, DuPont had actually offered to add on to the building for the Head Start program, plus build a playground on adjacent land.

Varley told the council Tuesday the Head Start program has different personnel in place now and is no longer interested in the building. However, in the past 48 hours Varley said a private business entity out of Keokuk saw the city was looking at selling the property and had interest.

“The discussion tonight is what to do with it and the reason for asking is.”

Project could save college $1.6M over 30 years

Board of Directors and President Dr. Michael Ash with the idea of using solar panels to alleviate some of the Keokuk Campus’ electrical costs.

"Year one at SCC there’s about a 13% reduced cost in energy. Right now the rate for a kilowatt/hour runs at about 14.5 to 15 cents. The rate the college will pay once the system is up and running should be about 12 cents per kilowatt/hour."

Ash said the benefits will be significant over time.

"We’re looking at, probably, in the first 15 years, a savings in our electrical costs of about $225,000. And then over the frame of these solar panels, about 30 years for us, about $1.6 million of savings," he said.

Mohrfeld said start-up costs vary depending on the number of panels installed, but it typically takes less than a decade for the system to pay for itself in savings. The SCC project is of a larger scale, tallying 1,180 total panes which produce about 350 watts of electricity each.

"The ROI is going to be four and half to six and a half years give or take. This particular system is 450,000 watts projected for cost savings, those slower months are taken into consideration.

"The reduction in output over the winter months is factored in to projections. Each building remains connected to the local utility, but the solar panels reduce the amount of grid power required," Mohrfeld said.

The team was asked if power is stored when output from the solar panels exceeds the needs of the campus, which does occur occasionally.

"The way net metering works is we don’t store the energy. Any excess in power daily goes back out into the utility grid and effectively feeds the neighborhood in a roundabout way."

"Ideally, now we can add courses on renewable energy systems and this technology could be incorporated into our curriculums."

The one concern that is being felt in Iowa is the fact that during this past legislative session, lawmakers began to look at a bill that would implement a tax on Solar Power in the state. Mohrfeld, who has seen a growing portion of his business become solar energy systems said the bill isn’t expected to be taken up due to the fact that it is convoluted and there is a lack in understanding of solar panels at the state level.

"We’re certainly under the impression that systems that are currently approved or installed are going to be grandfathered in…. that’s what we’re being told by the people that are involved in the bill."

Under the agreement between Keokuk Catholic Schools and SCC, KCS will retain ownership of the plot the solar panels are on. The private catholic school will receive power from two of the 12 rows of panels while SCC will be provided with the electricity from the other ten.

As for all the dirt and heavy equipment that has passed by wondering what’s going on. Mohrfeld said by June the ground around the panels should be restored to its previous condition.

"We told Keokuk Catholic Schools that we’d leave this ground exactly the way we found it and we intend to do so."

A beautiful smile helps make a great first impression.

Make sure yours does.

Ramped up patrols for 4/20 “holiday”

LEE COUNTY – The Fort Madison Police Department and Lee County Sheriff’s Office are informing motorists that Iowa law enforcement officials have announced they will conduct a Drug Impaired Driving specialized enforcement campaign throughout the state April 19-20. “Drive High, Get an OWI” is an intensified effort to fight drug-impaired driving in correlation with the 4/20 holiday. Similar efforts are occurring across the region in Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, and Oklahoma. Up and down the highways of these states, officers will be arresting anyone caught driving impaired.

During the Drive High, Get an OWI effort in Iowa, officers will intensify enforcement of the state’s drug-impaired-driving laws. Like drunk driving, drug-impaired driving is illegal in all 50 states, Puerto Rico, and Washington DC. Law enforcement will stop and arrest anyone caught driving drug-impaired. It is never safe to drive impaired. This not only means refraining from drunk driving, but also from drug impaired driving. Many people wrongfully believe that driving while high won’t affect them. It has been proven that THC—the chemical responsible for most of marijuana’s psychological effects—slows reaction times, impairs cognitive performance and makes it more difficult for drivers to keep a steady position in their lane.

Mohrfeld wants city to deed building to food pantry

the city is kind of land and building rich, but cash poor and we’re trying to divest ourselves of some buildings we don’t use to avoid future costs,” he said. He said since the city is not using the building it doesn’t get any use out of.

The building was on the market a number of years ago and the city got one bid that wasn’t high enough and the city didn’t accept it.

He said they would have to have permission from the Rashid family to sell the property, as well as agree that anyone owning the property would have to keep the memorial sign in the building that indicates it’s the Idol Rashid Memorial Building.

Councilman Matt Mohrfeld said his vision would be to turn the facility over to the pantry.

“The fact is that it was given as a community building and it’s my vision that it stay that way,” Mohrfeld said.

“I say we take that property, deed it over to the food pantry under a couple of stipulations.”

He said the city should use its strength to help the pantry raise about $125,000 to improve the building. He said investing the value of the building into the Food pantry might help them get additional grants.

Mohrfeld said this would keep the building as a civil building and, as far as a private business, there are other good places in Fort Madison for a business who wants to locate in Fort Madison to go.

“I think this is a unique opportunity to do something good that makes the town look a little better,” he said.

“I was told once that the judge of a community is how well they take care of the weakest of their people, and the food pantry is the epitome of that. So my suggestion… give it to em.”

Councilman Chad Cangas said he’d like to know more about any businesses that might be interested in buying the building before making any decisions.

Lin Cramer, the chairman of the Food Pantry board agreed the pantry would still offer the United Way an agreement where they might contribute to utilities or that kind of arrangement.

Mayor Brad Randolph said he was concerned that the building and the operations inside stay sustainable and said it made sense to look at donating the building.

Councilman Mark Lair said the city should be careful in what they are offering to some and not to others.

“I assume the head start people are not interested at all? Are they going to come back and say you didn’t offer us this deal you are offering them,” Lair said.

Varley said the new personnel at Head Start said the building wasn’t large enough so he didn’t envision them coming back to the table.

“I was told once that the judge of a community is how well they take care of the weakest of their people, and the food pantry is the epitome of that. So my suggestion… give it to ‘em.”

Gabbard: Medicare for all can include private insurance piece ing billions of dollars spreading extreme forms of Islam around the world, and President Trump is putting those agendas ahead of American priorities.

“It is both heartbreaking and angering to see how this president is more interested in putting the interests of Saudi Arabia ahead of the interests of the American people,” Gabbard said.

She said health care has to move toward Medicare for all so that everyone can gain access to basic quality levels of care, regardless of how much money you make.

She said private health care would still have a role in her health care picture.

“We’ve got a private insurance market. Those who choose to get that private insurance can do so, but it’s important for us in this country to make sure that we are providing that care for everyone,” she said.

“How can we not do this and be financially responsible? Look at every major country around the world that insures health care for every one of their citizens.
It’s wrong that in this country where we spend far more for health care than any other country, yet we still have worse outcomes and far too many people that cannot get the care they need.”

The 16-year military veteran said issues facing Iowa are the same issues that are facing the rest of the country such as a lack of affordable housing, lack of access to health care and agriculture pressures. She said the programs and decision at the federal level need to help address those concerns.

“The issues that we’re talking about are issues that are bringing Iowans out,” said the 38-year-old native of American Samoa.

“Yes, were talking about lack of affordable housing, lack of access to health care, high unemployment rates, agriculture and how many farmers are struggling – as well as the negative impacts some of these farms have on our environment – threats to water… to air.”

She said at the federal level lawmakers have to look at different policies and how to look at best serving the interests of people. Right now, we see on every level people are being left behind. People in Iowa are being left behind. In every state in the country people are being left behind. So that’s at the heart of what needs to change.”
