LOUISVILLE, Ky. – The best building trades students in the country lined up in the West Wing of the Kentucky Exposition Center this week, and four Bloodhounds hammered it out with them for a couple days.

After two days of intense preparation, planning, construction, and even demonstration, Fort Madison stands tall as the 24th best prep building trades team in the country, after representing Iowa in the SkillsUSA TeamWorks competition in Louisville.

The competition was part of the 6,400-student, 103-program contest held annually with a combined price tag, including donations and investments, of more than $36 million.

Fort Madison High School seniors Elton Kruse and AJ Nolting in the FMHS trades team in the competition on the southwest side of Lou-sville. The contest went more than three days and included an oral presentation on how they would tackle the project, getting the tools and supplies for the project, construction and demolition.

The project was to build a scaled back version of a kitchen/bath structure including wiring switches, outlets, lights, and two ventilation fans, planning both construction and demolition.

All four Fort Madison High School Bloodhounds competing at last week’s SkillsUSA TeamWorks competition help install a kitchen exhaust fan as part of their con-

“Working vacation shines light on program

W ell, as you can probably gather from the pictures of your balding, aging, and, apparently, lost editor, I’ve been on a working vacation since Wednesday, and even though we literally grow every day here at the Pen City Current Funhouse, sometimes we can’t do e-Editions.

Actually, we’re contemplating an investment in more technology that will allow us to remotely put this bad boy together, but another story for another time.

At the end of the day, sometimes you just need a vacation. But when Fort Madison Activities Director Jeremy Swink asked me last Monday if I was going to Louisville to cover the FMHS Building Trades team in the national SkillsUSA event, I looked at him like he was weird. Louisville? Uh…no.

I then sat through a three-hour school board meeting and thought to myself…why not? You travel to Fort Dodge which is four hours away to cover a 16-minute cross country run…and drive back home.

Why does this program deserve anything less…...and this is a national competition. AND Louisville is home to the Cincinnati Reds’ Triple A team and has Skywalker Chili outlets.

Now I’m not a fan of Skywalker Chili…it’s a bit sweet

This routine maintenance period, which is called a “Turnaround,” allows for the inspection of the plant’s equipment and necessary repairs as part of the company’s longstanding commitment to the safety of the facility, employees, and the community at large, including the protection of the surrounding environment. Turn-arounds also ensure reliable and efficient production at or above required capacities through the next several years of continuous operation.

“At Iowa Fertilizer Company, safety is the foundation of our business,” said IFCO’s Managing Director Darrell Allman. “As part IFCO’s normal business operations, our planned shutdown in July through early August will allow us to continue meeting production goals and to do so safely and in an environmentally friendly manner. During this timeframe, the company will invest tens of millions of dollars locally that will continue to drive economic growth throughout our community.”

The planned shutdown at IFCo will include up to 600 new temporary workers onsite and a total investment of approximately $30 million, which will help support a wide range of local businesses throughout Lee and Des the rooms and framing the structure with a roofing panel over two overhanging sides that included a window. All of the contestants were provided the exact same clothing, tools, plans and drawings, supplies, and equipment so the contest was based on knowledge and teamwork alone and no advantages could be given to any one team. FMHS Instructor and contest advisor Clint Kobelt said the four boys represented Fort Madison and the state of Iowa well, but the real win was in how they worked together over the three days.

“If you consider all four of these guys intend to go into the industry and their take away is we hold onto quality as opposed to quantity? Guys that can do that will write their own check in the future," Kobelt said. "We just couldn't get to the plumbing. We focused more on getting everything done properly rather than go into something different and not get it done. We took our time and it was quality over quantity for sure,” he said.

Kruse, who served as an adhoc foreman on the project, said he was very happy finishing in the top half. The senior actually said Thursday evening before the scores were announced Friday, that they would finish near the middle in the top 25. "I was happy with our effort and we hit all our marks. We talked about leaving the plumbing to last because it was a maybe,” he said.

"I think we’re where we expected to be at the end of the day. Plumbing was a maybe and it didn’t get done, but we did everything else the right way,” Kruse spent about five hours Thursday working on the masonry on the outside of the project, while Denning and Settles shored up the framing and started working on the back side, which was the only side that needed to be sided for judging. That side also included an 18x24 slide Pella window. Settles spent the seven hours working all the wiring from a main panel to three outlets, two switches, a range fan in the kitchen and ventilation fan in the bathroom. When Kruse finished the masonry, he moved Denning to the ventilation fan installation and he took over siding work with Settles. Judges would move around the 50 projects in the vast hall measuring, checking for levelness, safety, and housekeeping. The students got two 10-minute breaks each day and a 30-minute lunch. "Our expectations were we’d get close to finish it and I’d say we met that goal," Nolting said. “The only thing we didn’t finish was plumbing and we don’t really know much about plumbing. We did our best.”

Nolting said he ran into a couple snags in the panel box on some things he hadn’t seen, but he solved the problem by continuing to go back to the project drawings and rework the problems.

“Some things in the box I got a little confused with, but I kept going back to the prints and solved it. It was a goal of ours to get here. That’s what we were aiming for and we were excited to be here and represent Iowa.”

Settles said he enjoyed the competition. The junior all-state wrestler came with the group as an alternate when junior Brandon Reichelt, who was part of the team that won the state competition in April, had to back out for prior plans. “I enjoyed it. I came here knowing it was framing and electrical work and plumbing and we got most of that done. The metal studs that were part of the framing threw us for a little loop as well never dealt with that, but we figured it out in about five minutes.”

Denning said the competition certainly had a national feel to it. “You can tell this was a national competition for sure," he said. "A lot of this we’ve never done before… the trusses, the brick work, and the siding – we’ve never tackled anything like that before, so I think we did pretty good for all that.”

Kruse said aside from the plumbing there was very little the crew didn’t accomplish. "It was cool to see where we stacked up against all these teams. We weren’t sure if we’d finish dead last or what. I’d say in all honesty we’re in the top 25 somewhere," he said Thursday after time expired on the build. "We had some minor things with the framing and siding where we had to pull some nails but there really was nothing major. I had to shift to the siding after a little bit, but it all worked out.”

Kruse has already accepted a position with Carl A. Nelson, Co. and Nolting will be attending Kirkwood Community College’s Building Trades program. A representative from the college was on hand to watch some of the program’s incoming students. Kobelt said looking back at the competition, two things stand out to him.

“These boys had several opportunities presented where they could have surrendered to the pressure or tried to keep pace with their neighbor. But they set a course and they did exactly what they set out to do,” he said. They knew plumbing would be their Achilles heel. They played to their strengths and did what they did very well. But more important to me is I think they thoroughly enjoyed the experience. "You’re gonna have a job. You’re going to work somewhere but they figured out your job doesn’t have to be work. You’re on the biggest stage you’re ever going to be on competing against the best in the nation for the first time ever. They never got so wrapped up in it that it became work. If you can do that at 17, 18 years old, you have just figured out to make the next 50 years of your life so much better.”
Trip turned out to be a lesson in quality over quantity

for me, but I’m a huge fan of how my Reds (yeah…after 42 years they’re MY Reds) are playing right now. Our sales and marketing coordinator Brian Wright raves about Skyline Chili. So I got him a case (four can!) for $15.99. I told the lady at the counter to put the second one back, sorry Brian. It’s not THAT good.

We (I dragged my 19-year-old who’s on summer leave from college off the couch to go with me) got into town Wednesday late afternoon after several setbacks in trying to hit the road. We rolled into town and hit our hotel which was seven miles outside of town, grabbed some dinner, and turned in for the night.

The trades competition ran Tuesday-Friday with an orientation, oral presentations, and pick-up of project specs. Instructor Clint Kobelt had sent…I felt kinda bad about that because I quickly found Kobelt with arms crossed intently watching his troops from about 30 feet away.

My pass let me go wherever I wanted… I felt kinda bad about that because the FM parents and faithful that followed were stuck behind the barrier. Sometimes I just want to sneak a parent a pass and hand them my camera. I suppose if I gave them a dollar, it would be legit.

I went behind the barrier and down the aisle to the site where our Hounds were literally, hammering away. I took about 20 minutes worth of pictures before this old guy with an American flag dawg came up with a camera on a unipod and asked where I was from. I told him and then he pointed to his head and said, “you need a hard hat, just to be safe”. I tilted my head a little and said, “Where would I get one of those?”

“Down there at the end. there’s a bunch on wooden box,” he said with a smile. “Well, why don’t you go down there and grab two.” I said. His smile fell and he turned the other way with a glance back that met my eyes. I don’t like egotists… and I went and got a hard hat. I chatted up Kobelt on several occasions. That helped me avoid the $8 Nathan’s Hot Dog vendor strategically positioned right outside the west wing doors.

Kobelt talked about how proud he was of this group of kids who were experiencing in real-time, what he called the “Joy of the Journey”. “No matter how they finish…they’re winning right now as we watch them,” he said.

I left him to his thoughts after a while and I wandered about this uber-plex and watched what I could only imagine was a senior in high school build this fantabulous brick monument from scratch. He even had the words USA and a trowel in gold and white brick worked into the project. I watched him for probably 20 minutes. Very impressive.

Then I went over to the electrical wiring contests where money and equipment was on the line for the top wiring students. In other buildings everything vocational from auto mechanics, to photography, cabinet-building, forensic science, cosmetology, and many, many more were all in full tilt.

This event hosts 6,400 students and has investments, donations, and hard costs totaling $36 million and has a $27 million impact on the Louisville economy.

I continue to advocate that the education debt bubble is going to pop very soon. The cost of education is too high and wages are too low. Simple economics dictates that can’t stand up to the weight much longer.

But these kids, I think, are the ones who’ve figured it out. Upwards of 6,400 students who may not even have to go to college, but undoubtedly will shrivel the government’s grasp on the financial futures of those who do.

Anyhowoo. I left Thursday with all my pictures and interviews and headed back to the hotel for a dip in the pool and dinner at Bravo! I went back to the expo Friday morning at about 10 a.m., but everything was torn down. The tear downs, which were also scored on how much of the product can be reused, were completed in less than two hours.

My daughter and I pettered around the tight streets of Louisville until she got nauseous from all the driving. Dad’s kind of a “Squirrel!” type of motorist. “Ooohh…What’s thataa!!! We called it...

Pepsi Lee County County Speedway

DONELLIson – After having two weeks off, one for a scheduled night off and one lost to mother nature, the Pepsi Lee County Speedway in Donnellson, Iowa got back to racing action on Friday, June 28th.

But mother nature tried her best to put a damper on the night, as showers moved thru the area early afternoon. After the rains stopped the track crew went to work to see if the grounds could be ready in time for some racing. A late decision to race paid off with some very fast racing on a nice smooth racing surface.

At the end of Pilot Grove Savings Bank and Donnellson Tire & Service Veterans Night two driver's earned their first wins of the season at the track, while three others won for multiple times.

The 18-lap Roberts Tire Center IMCA SportMods took to the track first, with Derek Goble and Josh Holtman leading the field to green. But it was fourth-place starter Brandon Lambert who grabbed the lead on lap 1 over Holtman and Austen Becerra, who started 8th. Lambert then held the top spot until lap 3, when Becerra slipped past him for the top spot. Then just after the lap was scored complete the action was slowed for a spin in turn 4 by Brian Bergheger.

On the restart Becerra jumped back out front, with Daniel Fellows, who started 10th, and Ron Kibbe, who started 6th, following close behind. While Becerra worked the top of the track, Fellows would work the low line, as the two raced the next 4 laps side-by-side. With Becerra holding off Fellows at the line each lap, that was the case as the two raced the next 4 laps side-by-side. With Becerra and Kibbe close behind.

Fellows would pull away over the final laps to claim his fifth win of the season at the Pepsi Lee County Speedway. Becerra was 2nd, Adam Birck started 7th and finished 3rd, Kibbe was 4th, with Brandon Dale coming from 9th to finish in 5th.

A nice field of fifteen I-Smile Silver IMCA Late Models took to the track next for their 20-lap feature, with Stacy Griggs and Brian Harris making up the front row. Harris would take advantage of his starting spot by jumping out into the lead on lap 1 over Jay Johnson and Matt Strassheim, who started 6th. Just after lap 1 was scored complete the first caution appeared for a cone in turn four.

On the restart Harris moved back out front, with Johnson and Nick Marolf, who started fifth, close behind. The caution would appear after the completion of the lap, as Tommy Elston and Sam Halstead spun in turn four to bring out the yellow. Once again Harris jumped back out front on the restart, with Marolf over taking Johnson for second. Marolf would try to work under Harris over the next six laps, with Harris holding him off each lap at the line.

Harris then tried to pull away from Marolf over the next five laps, when heavy lapped traffic on lap 15 allowed Marolf to close back in on Harris. Coming off turn four for the checker flag Marolf tried to use lapped traffic to get under Harris for the win. But Harris would hold him off at the line to score his first win of the season at the track. Marolf finished second, Johnson was third, Strassheim was fourth, with Ron Boyse who started eighth rounding out the top five.

The Donnellson Tire & Service IMCA Stock Cars struggled to get their 18 lap feature going, as three cautions in the first three laps would slow the action. Once the action went green it would stay green for the final 15 laps, as Blakley held the lead on the restart of lap 3, with Abe Harris and Todd Reitzler, who started 8th, following him.

While Blakley worked to hold those two off, David Brandies was working his way into the mix. On lap 7 Brandies would slip past Blakley to grab the top spot, leaving Blakley to battle Reitzler for the runner up spot. While the battles went on behind Brandies, he would pull away to earn his second win of the season at the track. Reitzler won the battle for second, Blakley had a great run in third, Jeremy Pundt was fourth, with Dean Kratzer making his debut with a fifth-place finish after starting in ninth.

Nick Marolf and Levi Smith led the field to green in the 18-lap Budweiser IMCA Modified feature, with Marolf grabbing the lead on lap 1 over Smith and Bill Roberts Jr. Just after lap 1 was scored the first and only caution of the race appeared, as Craig Spegal lost a left front wheel in turn four to bring out the yellow. On the restart Marolf moved back out front, with Roberts Jr. and Dennis LaVeine, who started ninth, close behind. On this night Marolf was fast, as he cruised to his first win of the season at the Pepsi Lee County Speedway.

The 15-lap Discount Tire & Service IMCA Sport Compacts, with Ricky Miller Jr. and David Prim making up the front row. Prim would take advantage of his starting position to take the lead on lap 1.

The action was slowed for the second time of the race on lap 12 when a cone in turn 4 brought out the yellow. Moines counties. During the Turnaround, the community will likely see increased activity at the plant and additional traffic in the area. “We continue to thank the surrounding community for their understanding and support through this planned outage and look forward to our continued partnership with Wever and the surrounding communities,” said Robb Aultman, Plant Manager. “Iowa Fertilizer is deeply committed to communicating with all stakeholders and residents throughout the community to ensure everyone is aware of activities that may impact or be noticed in the area.”

Churchill Downs is a must stop through Kentucky

quiets for a while and I caught up on some work while she rested. Off to Dave and Busters so she could school me at air hockey – which she did, and we got enough tickets from $40 for some Sour Patch candy that I could have gotten for $3. But it's all about the memories, right?

Well, our favorite memories were a trip to Churchill Downs where we played the ponies for the first time ever. I got her the $40 Millionaire Row tickets that come with lunch so we could be in a cooler climate and get a bite. We missed the first race, but we dropped $20 on the second race and won nothing.

But then this 19-year-old who may go into Family Law started reading a little. On the next race (20 minutes later) she picked a 6-1 horse named Exemplar. The horse slipped to 14-1 before post. Apparently it ate a little too much alfalfa this week and was acting up and the betting level was low. Dad put $5 on this horse to place and we won $98.

We won a couple more times and stayed for lunch and about seven races. We ended up wagering $122 and winning $210. Not bad! Paid for the tickets and the tip, but what a great time we had.

This girl had never gambled in her life and was pounding her table with the best of them as I watched her and laughed. What a beautiful little girl of 19 all revved up. She felt undressed in a tank top and jean shorts. I, in my Reds jersey and hat, felt right at home. She looked gorgeous to me, I was steeped in watching her digest these racing books like college homework.

This girl hampered by Type 1 Diabetes, and then pulmonary hypertension that was diagnosed later than it should have been had dad, teachers, and doctors been watching a bit more carefully than we did. We take nothing for granted, not even an unanswered phone call.

We had a great ride home after that vixen of a GPS lady on my phone sent us on an unplanned trip through southern metro Indianapolis after she missed a closed exit.

We got back on the road and the Reds game had gotten out of hand when Javier Baez hit a grand slam. I cursed out the damned radio and said she could have controlled. About an hour later she started headbanging to a Michelle Branch song…(not sure that's even doable), but I thought her head was going to snap clean off and bounce down the dashboard like a coconut and shed be looking at me with drawn "X"s over her closed eyes.

I explained that very fear as she reeled from the ensuring dizziness and she laughed so hard she nearly hyperventilated. I can be a little dramatic. I think that's where she gets it.

From the trades boys finishing in the top half of the best teams in the nation, to winning some cash on the ponies, to envisioning my daughter's head falling clean off…it was a great working vacation.

Now it's back to work before we take a small break for the holiday…but that's Beside the Point.

RAGBRAI sets Biggest Dam Dip on the Mississip for Victory Park

KEOKUK – When RAGBRAI, the world famous bicycle ride ends in Keokuk on July 27, riders will experience the Biggest Dam Dip on the Mississippi at Victory Park, according to the Keokuk RAGBRAI organizing committees. With recent floodwaters overwhelming the riverfront, the final decision about the location of the dip site was delayed as long as possible. After consulting with local officials and contractors, the group agreed the park could be readied in time for the event.

The route to the dip site will bring riders underneath the bridge and across a temporary rail crossing BNSF with vendors setting up in the parking lot between the site of Main Street Keokuk, Inc.'s beverage garden and the riverfront.

There will be a need for volunteers at the dip site as well as other locations throughout the community. Anyone interested in getting involved as a volunteer can fill out the online volunteer form at keokukragbrai.com.
